Indictment in Bar-On affair likely - report

By MICHAL YUDELMAN and Jerusalem Post Staff

Members of the team investigating the alleged Bar-On-for-Hebron affair and sources in the State Attorney's office believe that, based on evidence gathered until now, they will be able to recommend filing an indictment, Israel Radio reported last night.

The report said the charge is not related to any criminal activity specifically related to either the Bar-On-for-Hebron deal or claims that Bar-On supported a plea bargain for Shas MK Aryeh Deri.

Also last night, Channel 1 reported that police are investigating whether Deri pressured Ma'ariv not to publish news of attorney Roni Bar-On's candidacy for attorney-general, so as not to sabotage the appointment.

The police have been probing suspicions that Deri extorted Bar-On's appointment as attorney-general from the cabinet, in the hope Bar-On could arrange a plea bargain or other benefits. The allegations are that Deri threatened that Shas would not support the Hebron agreement unless Bar-On was appointed.

During questioning by police Tuesday, Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu is believed to have denied that Deri struck any deal with him or anyone else regarding Bar-On's appointment.

Investigators met yesterday with State Attorney Edna Arbel and her aides to discuss Netanyahu's testimony and how to proceed further.

Efforts are focusing on whether or not several individuals already questioned by police were guilty of fraud or breach of trust, and perhaps blackmail. These include Deri, who police believe pressured various individuals, including some in the Prime Minister's Office, to have Bar-On appointed.

At this stage, police do not have evidence to support Channel 1's claims that Bar-On promised Deri a plea bargain if appointed, or that Deri demanded Bar-On's appointment in exchange for Shas supporting the withdrawal from Hebron.

The investigation is expected to enter its final stages next week, with several new individuals to be called in for questioning. Director-General Avigdor Lieberman and Justice Minister Tzahi Hanegbi are also to be questioned again. The investigation is expected to last at least another two weeks.

Deri's attorney in his ongoing trial on bribery charges, Navot Tel-Tzur, asked to meet Arbel next week to discuss the implications of the resignation of Deri's top lawyer on the team, Dan Avi-Yitzhak, and the resulting difficulty in continuing the trial.

Internal Security Minister Avigdor Kahalani hinted yesterday that Avi-Yitzhak's resignation is significant to the investigation. "Read between the lines and the headlines, and add one and one," he said. "Certain people planned the move and they had partners. Who did what, and whether it went as far as the justice minister and prime minister, that will have to be investigated."

Hasson, who broke the Bar-On-for-Hebron story last month, reported yesterday that Deri acted from the start to appoint Bar-On, despite his statement that he only did so to keep Avi-Yitzhak, who was also a candidate, as his attorney.

Hasson said a week before news of Bar-On's candidacy appeared in Ma'ariv, the newspaper's reporter Ofir Hacham called Bar-On to ask whether he was the leading candidate. Bar-On denied the story.

Immediately afterwards, Deri telephoned Ma'ariv owner Ofer Nimrodi and urged him not to publish the story. How did Deri know of the report and why did he try to hide it? asked Hasson.

A few days later, Deri called Nimrodi again, and when he understood the report was to be published, asked that the newspaper stress that Judge Zvi Tal was Shas's candidate. He also asked that if Bar-On's name was to be mentioned, the paper should write good things about him and say he is a leading criminal attorney and "high-powered."

Ma'ariv checked this out and found out, in addition to more details about Bar-On, that Tal was not a candidate. The newspaper did not fulfill Deri's requests, Hasson said.

When the Bar-On-for-Hebron affair was exposed, Deri claimed he hardly knew Bar-On and the only contact he had with him was a meeting five or six years ago, and another meeting at a party after Bar-On had resigned, Hasson continued.

Why, then, she asked, did Deri exert pressure not to publicize the candidacy of a man he was not in contact with and why, after realizing he could not prevent publication, did he then want good things to be written about him?

Former attorney-general Michael Ben-Yair sharply attacked Deri yesterday, stating that a man facing bribery charges cannot serve as the head of a political movement.

"A democratic state, governed by the rule of law, cannot tolerate a situation in which a man facing bribery charges is the leader of a political movement, and as such is courted by all sides of the political spectrum. Can this be comprehended in a democratic regime? Can it be that a man like this should not shut himself up at home until the end of the trial?"

MK Ran Cohen (Meretz) asked Attorney-General Elyakim Rubinstein's opinion about suspending the people involved in the Bar-On affair.

Weizman to host queen in Diana's old home

By TOM GROSS

These may not be many links between Princess Diana and the royal family these days, but next week President Ezer Weizman will be providing one.

In the saga of the House of Windsor, Weizman will hold the reciprocal banquet traditionally given by visiting heads of state for their host, Queen Elizabeth II, in Spencer House, the former seat of her former daughter-in-law Diana's family.

The queen will host a banquet at Buckingham Palace on Tuesday in Weizman's honor, but since the

FM cronies get top envoy jobs

By DAVID MAKOVSKY

Foreign Minister David Levy appears to have beaten Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu in a long stalemate on diplomatic appointments, yesterday naming three political cronies to positions in London, Pretoria, and New York.

Dror Zeigerman, a former Levy political appointee in Toronto, was named ambassador to Britain; Uri Oren, a former Levy political appointee in Los Angeles, was named ambassador to South Africa; and Kiryat Yam Mayor Shmuel Siso was named consul-general in New York, a position involving contacts with American Jewish organizations and the major media organizations based in the city.

Heads of American Jewish organizations, asked to comment on Siso's appointment, refused to do so. Leaders of several Jewish organizations in Los Angeles, asking not to be quoted, have made scathing comments about Oren's "non-performance" as consul-general in that city.

Levy's success with these appointments follows his triumph of last summer, when he forced Netanyahu to name another political ally, Elyahu Ben-Elissar, as ambassador to Washington. Netanyahu has yet to name any of his own allies to a diplomatic position.

Aides to Netanyahu refused to comment on why the premier yielded all the appointments to Levy.

The Foreign Ministry's appointments committee has still not named a UN ambassador - a post vacant for eight months, nor has it named envoys to Russia or Turkey.

During a meeting with Levy in September, then US envoy to the UN Madeleine Albright complained that Israel urgently needed to fill the UN post to defend itself

Toto mania

Toto fever gripped the country yesterday, as the mounting jackpot passed NIS 21 million and appeared to be headed to a new record, and officials predicted income from contest hopefuls would reach NIS 50m.

Meanwhile, picking this week's winning combination became even more tricky, as a promised storm threatened to cancel many soccer matches.

US Reform leader looks to CIS immigrants

By HAIM SHAPIRO

Immigrants from the former Soviet Union should be natural allies of the Reform and Conservative movements in the dispute over conversions here, but it hasn't happened and Rabbi Eric Yoffie, head of the Reform movement in the US, can't figure out why.

Yoffie, president of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations (UAHC), who is here for the Jewish Agency Executive meeting has been meeting with MKs in an effort to avert passage of the proposed conversion law, which would bar official recognition for non-Orthodox conversions performed in Israel.

But he admitted chances of stopping passage of the bill are slim, and one reason is that the Yisrael Ba'aliya Party supports the legislation.

Yoffie said he realized the party is motivated by coalition considerations, but he cannot understand how it can remain apathetic to the plight of over 100,000 immigrants who are not recognized as Jews. Many would gladly convert if the rabbinical courts would accept them, Yoffie said.

"It's a great puzzle to us. The same bill that denies Reform and Conservative conversions also prolongs the situation where people who consider themselves Jewish can't convert," Yoffie said.

In fact, a group of immigrants who have undergone Reform and Conservative conversion are due to demonstrate on Sunday, outside the office of Trade and Industry Minister Natan Sharansky, the head of Yisrael Ba'aliya, while the latter meets with American Jewish leaders, including the heads of the Conservative and Reform movements.

Yoffie said the Russian immigrants had been conditioned by the Soviet system to manage in unsavory situations, but he believes that this will soon change to anger and political activism, just as it had among the Ethiopian immigrants.

Sharansky's spokesman, Roman Polansky, said yesterday that the minister sees a great importance in deepening the connection with Diaspora Jewry and between Jews of differing religious backgrounds. However, Polansky also noted Sharansky has gone on record as opposing recognition of Reform and Conservative conversions performed here, while continuing to recognize those performed abroad.

Meanwhile, Yoffie said that some US Jews are diverting their UJA contributions to the Reform Movement. He himself, he said, had written letters at the request of several Jewish federations affirming the importance of giving to the general campaign.

Banks close early today

By GALIT LIPKIS BECK

The banks will be open no more than half a day today, as bank workers strike in their struggle to shift from a six- to a five-day workweek.

The National Labor Court yesterday issued a temporary injunction allowing the country's 40,000 workers to strike every day of the week, as long as the strike is limited to no more than half the regular daily banking hours.

The court rejected the Banks Association and Consumer Council petition against the strike. The petition was filed following the decision by the workers' committees and the Histadrut to call a complete strike at the banks every Friday. The majority of banks were closed last Friday.

Bank managements and workers' committees were instructed to engage in intense negotiations in an attempt to reach an agreement on the move to a five-day workweek. The managements and committees are required to submit progress reports to the court next Thursday. The court instructed border-crossing branches to remain open today.

Most of the banks' works committees said they intend to strike all day despite the court injunction and the Histadrut's call to respect it. At press time it was unclear how many hours each bank will strike.

"Bank Discount workers will not work Fridays until management agrees to a transition to a five-day workweek," said Riki Bechar, head of Bank Discount's workers committee.

Bank spokesmen said automatic teller machines and bank telephone services will be operating all day. A First International Bank spokesperson said its telephone banking service, which is usually closed on Friday, will be operating.

Rabbinate official linked to conversion scandal takes leave

By HAIM SHAPIRO and Itim

A senior administrator at the Chief Rabbinate is going on leave for two weeks because her name has been linked to the alleged payment of bribes to speed up conversions.

In a letter to Chief Rabbinate Director-General Gedalia Schreiber, Yehudit Herstein said that she felt called upon to take leave, although she insisted that she had committed no crime. She said she feared being used as a tool with which to attack the Chief Rabbinate.

Meanwhile the two rabbis suspected of taking bribes to speed up conversions, Michael Dushinsky and Binyamin Bar-Zohar, have had their remand extended until Monday, following a police appeal against an earlier decision to release them on bail.

Beit She'an Engines factory reopens Sunday

By DAVID FRUDGE

The Beit She'an Engines factory - closed for nearly three weeks due to insufficient orders - is to reopen on Sunday following an agreement between management and the Defense Ministry.

The accord means that the jobs of the 35 workers at the plant in the unemployment-stricken development town will be safeguarded for at least the next year.

The agreement was reached after a meeting yesterday between representatives of the Histadrut, the workers and management with Defense Ministry director-general Maj-Gen. (res) Ilan Biran at the ministry's offices in Tel Aviv.

The plant, which overhauls IDF engines, was shut down nearly three weeks ago due to a shortage of work and dismissal notices were later sent to the workers.

Foreign Minister David Levy, himself a Beit She'an resident, intervened following demonstrations by the workers outside the factory and the Knesset in Jerusalem.

Defense Minister Yitzhak Mordechai pledged to increase the number of orders placed with the plant, which relies entirely on work from the IDF, to enable the factory to stay in business.

Management, however, said the proposed number of orders was insufficient to keep the business running and all the workers employed for a full year.

Beit She'an Histadrut branch chairman Pini Kabalo said it had been agreed in the talks yesterday that the ministry would further increase the number of orders placed with the company this year to enable it to continue operating.

"We are all very pleased, especially the workers. This is what we had been fighting for - their right to be able to earn their livelihoods and the right of the factory to continue," said Kabalo.

"It was made clear, however, that this agreement would apply to this year only and that management and the workers would, during the course of the year, have to begin to start to break into the civilian market," said Kabalo.

Har Homa

Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu is learning that, in his job, there is no respite for the weary. No sooner is the grueling ordeal of the Hebron deal behind him than a new issue crops up, equally ridden with the threat of political, diplomatic, and physical unrest. The issue that brought him to power has now come back to haunt him: The charge of dividing Jerusalem.

Who would have dreamt that the candidate whose election slogan last spring was "Peres will divide Jerusalem" would now be accused of the same heresy by much of his own coalition? Approval of a long-simmering plan to build on Har Homa, a barren hilltop just inside Jerusalem's southern municipal boundary, has become the litmus test of whether Netanyahu will assert Israeli sovereignty over all of Jerusalem.

Netanyahu seems to be in a no-win situation. If he allows building to commence, Palestinian leaders are threatening it will be taken as a "declaration of war," violence could ensue, and his post-Hebron honeymoon could be nixed before he has had the chance to set down his bags. If he stops the bulldozers from rolling forward, his coalition could fall apart, and he would be seen as unable to impose his will in Jerusalem, the very issue on which he enjoys the support of a broader Israeli consensus than any other in the peace process.

The threat of the National Religious Party and other individual MKs to bring down the coalition over Har Homa seems more real than the similar threats over the Hebron agreement, but in the end they will prove equally as empty.

Netanyahu's increasingly feisty rightist opposition knows that the alternatives to the current government are a unity government with Shimon Peres or new elections, neither of which is likely to shift the government in their direction.

But even if coalition politics do not force him to do so, Netanyahu probably does not see the option of doing nothing on Har Homa as a realistic one. The Oslo process has already compelled Netanyahu to perform seemingly impossible ideological contortions—curtailing building in Jerusalem would mean that what was left of the Likud ideology had evaporated into thin air. Freezing development in Jerusalem would be worse than breaking a campaign promise, it would contradict an expectation so understood that it did not even have to be promised.

Given this situation, it is not surprising that Netanyahu committed to his allies before this week's Knesset debate on Jerusalem that the government would approve building on Har Homa, and that the timing would be decided next week. Hanging over the decision will be the threat of a replay of the violence that followed the opening of a new exit from the Western Wall Tunnel last September. There are reasons to believe, however, as General Security Service head Ami Ayalon told a Knesset committee, that there will be no repetition of the "explosion" that occurred at that time.

While the opening of the tunnel exit was the match that lit the conflagration, and left 70 dead in September, the real reasons behind it were the sense that Israeli territorial concessions had ended, and the crushing effect which the closure had on the Palestinian economy. Since then, both these factors have changed dramatically, leading to Ayalon's assessment that Palestinian Authority Chairman Yasser Arafat "no longer has an interest" in inciting a violent upheaval, though popular pressure could change Arafat's position.

Another significant factor mitigating against a repeat of September is the narrowing of Arafat's margin of deniability with respect to future violence. It would be considerably more difficult for Arafat to credibly deny responsibility for violence if he once again calls for "jihad," and if Palestinian police once again do not lift a finger to prevent confrontation between angry mobs and Israeli soldiers. This time, it will not be enough for Arafat to be one slim step removed from the rioting; he will have to be seen as working actively to prevent violence if he is to avoid responsibility for it.

Even if the question of violence is taken off the table, the diplomatic consequences of going forward with the Har Homa project in the teeth of blistering Palestinian opposition are formidable. The United States may well understand Israel's position, and might even veto the inevitable lopsided UN resolution condemning Israel. But the American push for positive gestures from the Arab world in the wake of the Hebron accord would suddenly be facing an uphill battle.

In effect, the diplomatic cost to Netanyahu of proceeding with Har Homa could be the loss of most of the international credibility he painfully won through the Hebron agreement. There is, however, a third option between doing nothing and building unilaterally—one that neither side can advocate but is in the interests of both.

The third possibility is a tacit deal between Netanyahu and Arafat.

Netanyahu could transform Israel's first redeployment, scheduled for March 7, from a symbolic two percent of Judea and Samaria, to a more substantial percentage. In exchange, Arafat would remain opposed to the building project, but would commit to working publicly and behind the scenes to prevent a violent response once the bulldozers start moving.

Netanyahu has implicitly introduced the concept of a deal with the suggestion that part of Har Homa could be slated for Palestinian housing.

There is a difference, however, between a "deal" that is a unilateral juxtaposition of "something for you, something for me" and a negotiated agreement. The Western Wall Tunnel case is actually an example of a failed juxtaposition-type "deal." Israel thought that granting Moslem authorities permission to open a new mosque on the Temple Mount would diffuse Palestinian opposition to the opening of the new tunnel exit. It did not.

Netanyahu had better learn from that mistake, and this time reach an agreement, at least indirectly, with Arafat. As usual, the United States is the key. The US could broker such an agreement in conjunction with Arafat's upcoming visit to Washington, which happens to be about the same time as Israel's first redeployment.

If such a deal becomes public, Netanyahu is sure to be criticized for "negotiating over Jerusalem" with Arafat. That bridge has been crossed by Oslo itself, which explicitly includes Jerusalem as a negotiating issue.

Arafat, too, might be criticized for "giving up" part of what he is seeking as a future capital. But Arafat will gain directly from whatever Israel concedes in the deal, and indirectly through the confirmation that he does in fact have influence over Israel's actions in its eternal capital.

Like most messy solutions, the main virtue here is being better than the alternatives.

'Yes, yes, Mr. Mazor – but where's the fire?'

Failure to see the whole picture

Israelis had barely come out of national mourning following the bitter deaths of 73 soldiers when the Ivory Commission's interim report on the helicopter tragedy gave us something else to chew our fingernails over—the factors that led to the crash, and which, if any, army personnel might be held responsible.

Somehow we don't seem to be focusing our attention in the right place. Certainly, whatever it was that made the two IDF helicopters collide was the immediate cause of the accident; but it wasn't the whole, fundamental cause. Human error on the part of one of the pilots? This is what the commission will likely conclude, but again, it doesn't go to the source of the problem.

No commission of inquiry is going to investigate the conceptual failure that caused the specific error that led to the crash, a failure rooted in a faulty concept.

The IDF has ceded control of the ground in southern Lebanon, leaving its outposts there under Hizbullah siege. In this situation, the IDF has been left with no choice but to use helicopters to get its soldiers to and from the field.

If the government wants to know what's really going on in Lebanon, it should appoint a completely different kind of commission of inquiry.

YISRAEL HAREL
Then it might get answers to questions like: How has a quantitatively and qualitatively great army like the IDF allowed a few hundred guerrilla fighters to harass it and maneuver it into a position of inferiority?

And: How is it that, despite the IDF's possessing the most advanced military equipment in the world, Hizbullah—lacking air-side by side with the purely "technical" one, and given it a mandate to investigate the whole range of factors that have brought us to our current sorry state.

FOR those prepared to see it, the issue thrown sharply into focus by the horror in the air is something quite other than the condition of those ill-fated helicopters, their

Quite another sort of inquiry should have been launched after the helicopter crash craft, armored forces or any sophisticated material to compare with ours—has managed to retain the initiative, setting ambushes, killing and wounding our soldiers, and making their lives a general hell?

And: Why have we given up on the offensive, which is the only thing that could put Hizbullah back on the defensive and get it off our backs?

Had the government wanted answers to these questions and many others, and wanted them to be courageous and honest, it would have appointed another commission of inquiry to work restore our deterrent ability, and it wouldn't be only Hizbullah who felt it.

Once we took back the initiative, it would be the enemy that found itself under siege. This would have its consequent deterrent effect on countries (Iran and Syria) far larger and more powerful than the little band that has shown up the IDF—and with it the whole state—as deficient in either ability or purpose.

As far as one can judge following the period of national mourning, the helicopter crash has not done irrevocable harm to our spirit or determination. In fact, reactions from both soldiers and IDF officers point to the contrary. This, surely, ought to facilitate an inquiry into the broader reason why IDF helicopters were and are compelled to take off with their soft and so-vulnerable underbellies full of the most precious cargo the country possesses.

So far, no commission has been appointed to inquire into how Hizbullah has put us into a state of siege we need air transport to bypass. Alas, I fear none will be.

This new pragmatism is welcome

Ever since Oslo 2 was signed in autumn 1995, Israelis have been subjected to a multitude of proposals regarding the final territorial disposition between Israel and the Palestinian Authority.

Politicians, academics, and interested political groups have treated us to a display of cartographic ingenuity, drawing lines in a multitude of shapes and positions, dissecting the West Bank into various Jewish and Arab territorial entities.

The name of the game in all these proposals has been pretty much the same. Each has tried to include the largest possible number of Israeli settlements on as small a piece of territory as possible—a logic that isn't hard to understand.

Within Israel, a growing proportion of the public—from the left and right wing—has slowly come to realize that Israel will not be able, even if it wants, to evacuate 140,000 settlers without giving rise to substantial civil unrest and internal violence. This has also been intrinsically recognized in the cross-party agreement reached between Yossi Beilin and Michael Eitan.

Recent press advertisements supporting this proposal have categorically stated the desire to leave all settlements in situ. Such a position is acceptable to the Likud MKs because of their ideological stance in favor of settlements; at the same time it constitutes a major compromise on the part of the Labor MKs.

But even the latter recognize the difficulty involved in any attempts to remove or evacuate these settlements.

DAVID NEWMAN

While this explains the growing political consensus around retaining the maximum number of settlements, there is, equally, a growing awareness on the part of Israeli policy makers that this should include as small a part of the West Bank land area as possible.

For the Palestinians, any attempt amount of territory available to a Palestinian entity/state, the proposal suggests compensating the PA with an equal area in less sensitive regions, ones not populated by Israeli settlements.

The idea of territorial reciprocity—namely that the Palestinians be compensated for any territorial attrition within the West Bank—is

Enter territorial reciprocity, a novel idea in the ongoing political discourse to retain settlements as part of Israel means less territory on which to establish their state.

Hard as it may be for many Israelis to appreciate, the Palestinians' demand for a state encompassing the whole of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip is, for them, a major concession.

By making such a demand they are publicly acknowledging that they no longer see the whole of pre-state Palestine as their future political homeland.

The West Bank and Gaza Strip make up approximately 23 percent of the whole of Palestine west of the River Jordan. Any further attrition within that limited territory will be strongly contested by the Palestinian negotiators in the next round.

AMONG all the proposals drawn up during the past year, the Beilin-Abu Mazen document for the first time suggests a solution to this problem.

Rather than simply reducing the totally new to the ongoing political discourse. Like many other such concepts, not least the notion of a Palestinian state, it will meet much opposition to begin with; but it will gradually become part of the accepted give-and-take between the two sides.

The Beilin-Abu Mazen document is particularly innovative in proposing the expansion of the Gaza land area, rather than the West Bank itself, as part of this territorial reciprocity. This solves two major problems—one Israeli, one Palestinian.

From the Israeli perspective, any change of the "Green Line" boundary could only come at the expense of the West Bank, not within Israel itself.

It is difficult, if not impossible, to delineate any area along the course of the Green Line which could be redrawn in favor of the PA. This would be much easier to accomplish in and around the Gaza Strip, where there is more land available for this form of cartophographic innovation. From the Palestinian perspective, the Gaza Strip is one of the most densely-populated micro-regions anywhere on the earth's surface. International groups have prepared a number of documents pointing to the need to expand the Gaza land base if it is to absorb the existing population economically. There has even been talk about expanding the Gaza area to include small pieces of adjoining territory both within Israel and Egypt.

WHAT is clear is that a new pragmatism is emerging. Each side recognizes that the "other" has constraints which will prevent it implementing policies that meet severe opposition at home.

An Israeli decision to evacuate too many settlements, or Palestinian acquiescence in accepting territory amounting to less than the West Bank and Gaza Strip, are equally problematic for an Israeli or Palestinian government respectively.

New ideas and concepts are necessary if a final territorial agreement is to be achieved. There is nothing holy about the artificially-drawn boundaries of 1948 making them any more, or less, valid than any other agreed line of separation between an Israeli and Palestinian entity.

It remains for both sides to exercise their respective cartographic imaginations and draw up a final line of demarcation between them.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

"HOLOCAUST COOKBOOK"

Sir, — Efraim Zuroff is a friend of long standing whose scholarship on the Holocaust I respect, and whose passionate commitment to bringing the perpetrators to justice I revere. He will remain a personal friend even though I beg to differ with his judgment (your story, "Outrage over 'Holocaust cookbook,'" February 14).

In Memory's Kitchen is a document which tells us how women spent their time and how they confronted and wrestled with hunger by recalling the past—a time when they had homes and kitchens. To call the publication of the so-called cookbook "sick" is to defame those who compiled it in the camps. That is disrespectful. Instead, I believe that the recipes are personal documents of those who endured the abyss. As historians, we must engage documents in a variety of forms—albeit unusual forms.

As to the publishing success of the work, let me set the record straight. I received no funds for writing the foreword. I receive no royalties. I wrote the foreword because I believe that people should know about Theresienstadt and about how some women struggled with their hunger. I still do.

EX-PRISONERS OF ZION

Sir, — All who have worked for Soviet Jewry in the last 30 years must be grateful to you for publishing Batseva Tsur's article on the hardships now being endured by the leaders of the Soviet Jewish Campaign.

Ex-Prisoners of Zion and ex-long-term refuseniks paved the way for the 750,000 immigrants who now bring prosperity to Israel. All of us, in Israel and in the Diaspora, owe them a debt of gratitude and we should all feel shame that they are now being, literally, thrown on the dust heap.

We hope that the heroes and heroines we were so proud of in past years will not end their days in penury.

THEOSOPHY

Sir, — I was intrigued by the article of January 31 by Judy Siegel about Thomas Edison's anti-semitism finally coming to light. No doubt, Edison found much to support his views when in 1878 he joined the Theosophical Society (then a secret society).

The Theosophical Society, which is today represented in scores of countries, openly promotes its teachings of "a new world order and a universal world religion based on tolerance and brotherhood." But in spite of its genteel approach, from its beginning theosophy made no effort to hide its hostility toward the monotheistic faiths, and particularly toward the Jewish people. The founder of theosophy, Helena P. Blavatsky, systematized the doctrine of the "pure Aryan" race, and the "blood taint" which resided in the Jewish race.

If this sounds eerily familiar, should it surprise anyone to learn that theosophy gained another prominent devotee some 50 years after Edison—Adolf Hitler, who spread theosophy throughout Germany in the 1930s?

EXCELLENT EDITORIAL

Sir, — Your editorial of February 14, "Corruption and conversion," calling for responsible compromise by all three streams of Judaism, is excellent. Reading it, I TERRY LEWIS loves his mummy, but wants to sell her just the same.

The US Customs Service said Lewis, owner of Noneseuch House of Antiques, in Wiscasset, Maine, is free to sell the 3,000-year-old mummy, though the Egyptian government could still claim it.

"I'd really like to get around $35,000 so I'm not going to sell her right away," Lewis said. "I'm still very fond of her. After all, she has done a lot for my business."

The remains have been on display in a glass case at the front of the antique shop since 1992, when a friend of Lewis's bought the mummy at auction.

Customs officials had ordered Lewis not to sell the mummy until the Egyptian government had a chance to see if it had any cultural value, but the order expired without word from the Egyptians.

THE CAUSE of fire at Matthew Gould's home is listed as "dog playing with matches."

Gould, 22, told Kelso, Washington, firefighters that his German shepherd had gnawed into a cardboard box containing matches.

"This is a first," said fire Capt. Mark Maker. "The cause of the fire officially is a dog playing with matches. Somehow she chewed just right and didn't slobber enough."

Gould was relieved when firefighters believed his story. "I was afraid those guys thought I was playing with matches or something," he said.

The dog may have chewed her way right out of a home. "We've been talking about getting rid of her for a while now," Gould said, "and this kind of put it over the top."

MOMENTS BEFORE Iraqi soldiers captured Guy Hunter during the Gulf war, the US Marine buried his wallet in the Kuwaiti desert so his family would not be targeted by terrorists.

Six years later, the mud-soaked billfold appeared in Hunter's mailbox with all its contents—credit cards, his military ID, family photos and $47 in cash. A laborer had found it and sent it to the Marines, who forwarded it to Hunter, now 52 and retired.

"It was so strange," said the former prisoner of war from Jacksonville, North Carolina. "It seemed like a voice from the past suddenly spoke to me."

Hunter buried the wallet because "I was afraid they might use it for terrorist purposes against my family back in the States. We were captured within five minutes. There was nowhere to run."

ARCHEOLOGISTS working with a huge urban highway project in Boston are on the lookout for wooden chests pitched into the harbor during the Boston Tea Party.

Finding anything in the excavation for the city's Central Artery Project is a long shot, said Robert Hasenstab, one of the project's archeologists.

But it's the best chance yet to find a physical link to the Tea Party, when rebels cosumed Mohawk Indians boarded docked cargo ships and dumped 342 chests of tea into the harbor on December 16, 1773, to protest British taxes.

"I'm going to keep a serious eye out," Hasenstab said. "It would be great."

The excavation is expected to reach the area of old Griffin's Wharf, recorded as the site of the demonstration, which lies under tons of landfill.

Over and above building at Har Homa

The message emitted by the buildup of tension surrounding the Har Homa issue is that the threat of Palestinian violence will be with us for the duration of final-stage talks with the Palestinian Authority.

In fact, there is a good chance of it remaining with us even longer, given the likelihood that those talks will result in very inconclusive arrangements indeed.

Of equal, perhaps greater, importance than the construction at Har Homa itself is Israel's urgent need to demonstrate that it can confront — and deal — with this Palestinian tactic of resort to violence whenever we don't give in to Palestinian demands.

Threatening violence parallel to continuing peace talks is a weapon characteristically employed by the weaker side in negotiations. That, however, is no reason for Israel to apologize for being the party that holds the stronger cards, nor any reason to refuse to play them.

One argument advanced against going ahead with the construction at Har Homa is that it will invite a reprise of the Palestinian riots that erupted following the opening of the exit to the Hasmonian tunnel in the Old City last September, riots in which 15 Israeli soldiers and over 60 Palestinians were killed.

The mistake we made back then wasn't the opening of the tunnel — Israel had tried to coordinate that move with the Wafiq and the Palestinian Authority as a quid pro quo for acquiescing in their opening of the new Moslem underground prayer halls next to the Al-Aksa mosque.

The mistake was allowing ourselves to be surprised by the well-orchestrated Palestinian violence, unleashed at Yasser Arafat's behest.

Our response this time must include not only better preparation in the event of a repeat provocation of violence, but effective measures to prevent violence erupting in the first place.

One of the clearest and best ways to do that would be, for example, informing Arafat and every PA policeman and secret police operative that Israel had given trained sharpshooter units shoot-to-kill orders as regards all armed PA police the moment

Israel must confront the Palestinians' tactic of 'violence to order'

Palestinian violence broke out. We can rest assured that Palestinian interest in continuing the final-stage talks is so great that not even this would endanger continuation of the process.

ALTHOUGH there is no wall-to-wall consensus in Israel on anything, one of the major reasons for making Har Homa a test case is that there is such a broad measure of internal agreement on it.

During the Six Day War, when Jerusalem was still divided, the Jewish half of the city was shelled by Jordanian artillery from the surrounding mountaintops. In the decade following, it was decided to annex the mountaintops to the newly-united Israeli Jerusalem and build a ring of neighborhoods on them.

These became Gilo, East Talpiot, the renewed Hebrew University and Hadassah Hospital complexes on Mt. Scopus, French Hill, Givat Hamivtar, Ramat Eshkol and Ramot. More recently the haredi neighborhood of Shuafat Ridge was added to close the ring in the north.

Those hilltop neighborhoods, where today over a third of the Jewish population of Jerusalem lives, were an expression of the strategic concepts espoused by the Golda Meir and Rabin Labor governments of the 1970s.

The fact that the ring was not closed at Har Homa in the south only reflects the fecklessness of the Likud governments of 1977-92, and of the retreat of the Labor Party under Shimon Peres from its earlier strategic concepts.

When Yitzhak Rabin replaced Shimon Peres as Labor leader in 1992, he pushed the Har Homa project vigorously.

All of this is not to deny the very real existence of over 160,000 Palestinians in Jerusalem, a demographic reality that will require painful compromises in the final-stage talks.

The building of Har Homa is essential to ensure that the compromises eventually worked out do not include too great a contiguity between the Palestinian neighborhoods within Jerusalem and the PA areas beyond the outer ring.

But the same reasoning that justifies building Har Homa, closing the ring to the south, provides strong reasons to oppose the hasty plans to build in the Ras al-Amud quarter.

Such a penetration into the heart of the Palestinian neighborhoods to the east of the walled Old City would be nothing more than an unnecessary provocation.

Complex trade-offs will lie at the heart of the final-stage talks on Jerusalem. It is essential that the threat of having to conduct those talks under the shadow of renewed Palestinian violence be neutralized.

Way of pleasantness, path to peace

The downside of the ingathering of the exiles is that we've learned how mean we can be to each other when we don't have the goyim around to keep us in line. And it's not a pretty sight.

This week we had MK Moshe Shahal taking to the airwaves to name his arch-rival Ya'acov Terner as the senior police officer reported to have sexually harassed a teenager. The story was denied by the girl in question this week, which is probably why it was never originally printed.

But the facts didn't stop Shahal from doing his "civic duty" and dragging Terner and his family through the mud.

It's that kind of enmity that enabled hate-filled charges of haredi draft-dodging to surface in the wake of the recent helicopter crash.

Even as the country, overcome by grief, was feeling united for the first time in many years, there were those who couldn't resist the temptation to bash the haredim ("The 73 fallen soldiers do not represent a cross-section of the country... there are those who don't serve.")

While their timing was reprehensible, the issue itself is valid. Unresolved, it threatens to undermine any prospect of genuine respect or understanding between religious and secular.

A report released by the Defense Ministry this week says that 60 percent of haredim who receive a "deferral" in order to study Torah end up never doing any service at all.

Why, indeed, should they be exempt from any form of national service? Interestingly, a survey done at the end of last year showed that the secular public isn't as upset about haredi evasion of military duty as it used to be.

Perhaps the peace process, the general decline in status of the army, and growing public acceptance of secular youths who opt out of combat duty had dampened criticism of the haredim on this score.

But, as we saw this month, the issue is always there, waiting to be used as ammunition in the continuing religious-secular battle. One of the most difficult things for the secular public to swallow is the idea that there are "layabouts" haredi youths hitching a ride on the backs of the genuine, heavy-duty scholars.

It's one thing to allow people who are studying Torah seriously to be exempted from military service, they say, quite another to let the guys with the cellular-phones, rented cars and cigarettes off the hook.

I'm wrapping up a period of three months' study in a haredi yeshiva in Jerusalem, and I've allow certain religious concerns to be addressed.

ONE option would be to have these youngsters enroll in haredim programs that cater to the general public.

Three examples come to mind: Zichron Menachem, which supplies a wide range of services to children with cancer and their families; Shalva, which provides afternoon, weekend, and "home care" for severely handicapped children; and Rabbi Frier's medical placement program, which matches seriously ill patients with years compared to three for those who do straight army), some will dismiss this program as a cop-out. There will always be the Moshe Shabals out there with blind hatred for one group or individual, or another. But this kind of national service could go a long way toward changing the public image of haredim. And it would reduce the increasing number of haredim who defer or evade national duty altogether.

It would also help haredi students who aren't studying scholars by giving them a chance to do national service instead of having to sit in a yeshiva where they aren't learning productively.

Currently, many hang on because their only alternative is the army — an unacceptable option because of its perceived ultra-secular climate.

At first, many haredim would buck such an innovation. But in addition to the other benefits, yeshiva students themselves would gain from such service. A serious workout with a handicapped child does wonders for one's soul, and character.

Finally, though, even a solution along these lines must give yeshiva heads the option of "protecting" some of their most promising students.

There really are those who support the world — including the state — with their Torah learning, and for those select few the place from where they can best serve the nation is the study hall.

To be sure, very basic and serious differences in world view divide religious from secular.

But if we are prepared to give up vital water resources and strategic territory for the sake of peace with the Palestinians, we can surely at least try for better understanding and respect within our society, for peace among ourselves.

Geula Amir's golden opportunity

Just over a year ago I sat in Leah Rabin's living room interviewing her for Voznes magazine following the assassination of her husband.

I asked her how she felt when Yigal Amir's mother made a televised plea to the Rabin family asking for forgiveness.

"I didn't watch it," retorted Rabin. I'm not interested in [Yigal Amir] or his family... the way the media gives his family so much attention is appalling. It shouldn't be allowed. We are doing everything to fight it."

Well, you can put your boxing gloves back on, Leah, because Geula Amir has just gone prime time, American-style.

Gone are the tears, the apologies, the soul-searching. Long forgotten is her "Today, [Yigal] is not mine" speech.

Fifteen months after the assassination, the nursery school teacher and religious mother of eight has undergone a metamorphosis. She's on the attack.

This mother of two imprisoned sons — one doing time for murdering the nation's prime minister, the other for supplying the bullets that killed him — is searching for the "truth" about the Rabin assassination. And she's taking her cause on the road.

A bizarre relationship has been forged with none other than George, the sexy pop-political magazine founded by John F. Kennedy Jr., son of, who this week released a 10,000-word essay by Amir. (For the record, the hefty piece was "produced with the assistance of her lawyers.")

Not only has "John John" indulged Geula with this 13-page opus entitled "A Mother's Defense," his magazine is also sponsoring a two-week Geula Amir speaking tour.

Of course, Geula claims there is no money involved. (There never is.) She just wants to tell her side of the story.

I try to picture the scene. Geula descends from the plane at JFK Airport. Standing tall and dashing at the end of the runway is John Jr., waving a white placard reading "Amir."

She smooths the wrinkles from her dress, then flashes the famous Amir smile. They hop into his stretch limo and take off for a media whirlwind tour, assuring record sales for George, and granting Amir and her family's plight a legitimacy it does not deserve.

It's quite mind-boggling. But there is something even more incredible, and that is JFK Jr. himself.

I wonder how he would have felt a year after his father's assassination, hearing that Lee Harvey Oswald's mother had been granted a prestigious soapbox from which to explain to the world how her son, the scapegoat, "had been molded into the perfect assassin."

IN HER personally researched investigative report, Amir enlightens the discriminating reader on the Oslo accords and how they divided the nation, on the General Security Service scandals, and on full guy Carmi Gillon.

She expends vast energy on that "dybbuk" Avishai Raviv and the conspiracy theory, and is not reticent regarding the hardly democratic policies of the State of Israel.

A few highlights: "[The Israeli authorities] are doing everything so that the public will hate him... They're trying to break Yigal by breaking us. But they won't succeed. We won't break."

"I know my son did not kill Rabin alone. Things are beginning to come out. The day will come when people will come up to me on the street and say, 'You must be proud to be Yigal Amir's mother."

I'd like to ask John Jr.: Isn't there a fine line between what sells and what smells?

I'd like to ask him why he has welcomed with such wide-open arms an elaborate and "stardling" account by such respected, even-handed authorities on the subject as Geula Amir and her legal entourage, when George magazine has barely mentioned the Rabin assassination until now.

I will never forget what we underwent as a nation when Yitzhak Rabin died. Our grief lay on us like a heavy burden. Geula may be able to pull the wool over American readers' eyes with her tales of Yigal ("He will redeem" etc.), but we Israelis know the difference between wool and fool.

Aside from Yigal's fan club, most Israelis must believe Geula has gone way too far — and I don't mean the 10,000 kilometers between here and the US.

As for John Kennedy Jr., he should be the last one to egg her on, to ignite her 15 minutes of fame and prime the printing presses for an eventual lucrative book deal.

Ironically, our only hope from the sidelines lies in officialdom: The US Embassy has not at this juncture granted Amir a visa to enter the land of golden opportunity.

She was supposed to have been there Sunday, JFK Jr. may end up boosting his magazine sales — but just maybe Geula won't make it to her own party after all.

If she does, I can assure her there will be no goody bags waiting for her at home.

China mourns Deng

News agencies

BEIJING — Ten thousand people will be invited to the funeral of Deng Xiaoping next Tuesday in China's Great Hall of the People, and his eyes will be donated for transplant and his organs for research.

Deng's family, in keeping with his wishes, requested that there be no solemn bowing before his corpse. His ashes will be scattered rather than saved, and foreign leaders will not attend his funeral, the high-level Communist Party committee overseeing the arrangements said yesterday.

Deng, one of the last leaders of the Communist revolution, died late Wednesday night of a lung infection and in the advanced stages of Parkinson's disease. He was 92. Increasingly frail, he was last seen in public three years ago.

World leaders yesterday paid tribute to patriarch Deng as the architect of modern China and praised him for freeing the socialist shackles that hobbled the country's vast population.

President Bill Clinton expressed his sadness and called Deng an "extraordinary figure on the world stage over the past two decades."

US Secretary of State Madeleine

Albright, visiting London, told reporters: "It would obviously be a great advantage to the Chinese as well as to all of us if there were a smooth transition (in Beijing)." Asian financial markets reacted positively with stocks in China, Hong Kong and Taiwan closing mostly higher as Deng's death was seen as removing recent uncertainties for investors.

But the impact on European markets was muted.

France heaped praise on Deng but drew a veil over his formative years spent laboring in grimy French factories, where the man who became China's leader learned to hate capitalist exploitation.

Deng left China in 1920 as part of a work-study program, arriving in the southern port of Marseille at the age of 16 and spent the next five years in France, working, while studying, in factories where he saw the seamy underside of capitalism. French President Jacques Chirac praised the dead Chinese leader as the main architect of China's modernization and recalled that France had "greeted Deng Xiaoping on its soil in the early 1920s."

The office of British Prime Minister John Major said Deng's "initiative played the crucial part in creating today's economically dynamic and successful China."

Germany described Deng as an important statesman who had decisively influenced China's development over 20 years.

"Deng Xiaoping counts as one of the great leadership personalities of China's recent history," Chancellor Helmut Kohl said in a statement.

Diplomats at NATO, which has no formal dealings with China, took the death calmly. There was no official comment from the alliance.

China opposes NATO's plans to expand eastwards, but far less stridently than Moscow. Diplomats said they expected no policy change.

Asian leaders mourned Deng's death and said his reforms transforming China into an economic powerhouse had earned him a place among the world's great statesmen.

From Pakistan to New Zealand, prime ministers and presidents heaped tribute upon Deng, saying he would long be remembered for dismantling the socialist chains that tied China's vast population for decades.

Japanese Prime Minister Ryutaro Hashimoto said he was filled with great sadness at Deng's death and hoped his passing would not affect crucial Japanese-

Sino relations, which he said were of growing importance for peace and stability of the world.

"I will continue to work with China's leaders for the long-term stability of our bilateral relationship," Hashimoto said in a statement.

South Korean President Kim Young-sam said he was saddened but hoped Seoul's friendly ties with Beijing would strengthen.

Communist North Korea's de facto leader Kim Jong-il praised Deng as an "intimate friend and comrade-in-arms" of the Korean people and said his death was a great loss to them.

Officials in the British colony of Hong Kong, which reverts to Chinese rule at midnight on June 30, paid their respects.

Colonial Governor Chris Patten was one of the first to be escorted inside the Xinhua news agency, Beijing's de facto mission in Hong Kong, to offer his condolences.

"He will be regarded by future generations as an historic figure," said Patten, the territory's last governor.

But reaction was not all praise. Tibet's government-in-exile accused Deng of decades of repression and said his death offered a chance to his successor to solve the region's long-standing problems.

Liz Taylor brain operation begins

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Surgeons began operating on Elizabeth Taylor to remove a benign brain tumor yesterday.

"Surgery is under way and things are going as planned," Cedars-Sinai Medical Center spokesman Ron Wise said. The actress was wheeled into the operating room about an hour earlier for the anticipated four to five hours of surgery.

Miss Taylor, who turns 65 next week, was in good spirits, said her publicist, Maria Pignataro. She was expected to recover fully. The tumor was discovered during a routine checkup Feb. 3. Her four children — Michael Wilding, Christopher Wilding, Liza Todd-Tivey and Maria Burton-Carson — as well as several of her older grandchildren were waiting at the hospital. A fleet of television microwave and satellite trucks was lined up outside the hospital, their crews huddled inside to avoid strong winds hitting the area.

A neurosurgeon who successfully treated comedian George Burns was leading the team of doctors in removing the growth in the lining of the left parietal lobe. The area is over and behind the left ear.

Dr. Martin Cooper, clinical chief of neurosurgery at Cedars-Sinai, was using a computerized probe to give the team a three-dimensional view of the growth.

"He's going to be using a computer-generated neurological navigation system and micronavigational techniques," Wise said.

"They will produce a three-dimensional image of the tumor. A probe will enable the surgeon to precisely locate the tumor."

Miss Taylor won Academy Awards for Butterfield 8 in 1960 and Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? in 1966.

The location of the tumor was initially described by Pignataro as being in the area of the left frontal lobe.

However, Wise said it is farther back in the parietal lobe area.

The operation was earlier described as common by Dr. Gregory J. Rubino, an expert who said post-surgery hospitalization usually ranges from three to five days.

Diplomat surrenders 'Cosby's daughter' pleads not guilty

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Georgian diplomat involved in a Washington car crash that killed a 16-year-old girl surrendered to police yesterday to face involuntary manslaughter charges.

Georgia had waived diplomatic immunity privileges for the diplomat, Georgy Makharadze. The case raised new outcries against diplomats who accumulate traffic citations or violate other laws with immunity in the United States.

Makharadze, 35, was taken in handcuffs by city traffic police and charged with one count of involuntary manslaughter five counts of aggravated assault. The manslaughter charge carries a maximum 30 year sentence upon conviction.

He was charged in the Jan. 3 crash that killed Jovian Waltrick, a Brazilian girl who had recently moved to a Washington suburb in Maryland.

Makharadze appeared with three attorneys at the police station shortly before 10 a.m. The attorneys left, without their client, several minutes later.

Although diplomatic immunity was waived, Georgian officials may ask that, if convicted, Makharadze be imprisoned in Georgia.

The maximum penalty for involuntary manslaughter is 30 years.

NEW YORK (AP) — The woman who claims she is the illegitimate daughter of comedian and movie star Bill Cosby pleaded innocent yesterday to conspiracy and extortion charges.

Autumn Jackson, 22, and her alleged accomplice, Jose Medina, 51, entered their innocent pleas during arraignment in Manhattan federal court.

"I'd like to send my condolences to the Cosby family about Ennis' death," she added, referring to the 27-year-old son of the comedian who was shot to death Jan. 16 as he changed a flat tire in Los Angeles.

Copts slain after Israel visit

ASSIUT, Egypt (Reuters) — Police in southern Egypt may have found a motive for the massacre of 10 Christian youths by suspected Islamists after investigations showed that many of them had visited Israel, security sources said yesterday.

Six gunmen shocked Egypt last week when they stormed a church in Abu Qurqas town and sprayed bullets into a youth meeting. Police believe they belong to the militant al-Gama'a al-Islamiya (Islamic Group).

The father of Adel Mikhail Abdel Malak, one of the youths killed in the attack, told reporters yesterday his son had worked in Israel for five months as had some of the others shot dead inside the church.

Southern police officials confirmed that some of the youths had spent several months in Israel and said this fact had added "another dimension" to the incident.

Militants have often targeted policemen and sometimes Christians in their attempt to transform Egypt into a strict Islamic state, but security sources said that this was the first time that gunmen attacked the interior of a church.

trying to extort millions from Cosby, one of the most famous entertainers in America, by threatening to go public with her claim that she is his illegitimate daughter.

Cosby denied that Ms. Jackson was his daughter but later said in a television interview that "there is a possibility" he is the father because he had an affair with her mother.

Ms. Jackson was freed on bail following her Jan. 18 arrest.

She and Medina had come to New York and signed a $24 million agreement to stop her from telling her story to the tabloids, prosecutors said. Medina remains jailed.

The alleged extortion attempt came two days after Cosby's son was killed.

Since Ms. Jackson and Medina were first charged, Ms. Jackson's boyfriend, Antony Williams, has pleaded guilty to helping in the alleged plot by doing research on Cosby and his corporate sponsors and by taking the pair to the airport for their flight to New York.

Cosby has said he made payments to Ms. Jackson for educational purposes, as he had for other needy young people.

Tug of war

The debate over construction in Har Homa hits at the heart of the issue of Jerusalem's sovereignty, Herb Keinon reports

To hear the opposing sides of the Har Homa issue talk, one could think that the very future of Jerusalem rests on whether or not this neighborhood will be built. Those advocating construction argue that not building Har Homa would signify the redividing of Jerusalem. Those opposing the neighborhood say that building will ignite a conflagration that could lead to war.

"Not building in Jerusalem, not closing PLO offices in Jerusalem, not approving the plan to build between Ma'aleh Adumim and Jerusalem is, de facto, dividing Jerusalem," Likud-Gesher MK Michael Kleiner, unofficial head of the Land of Israel Front, said this week.

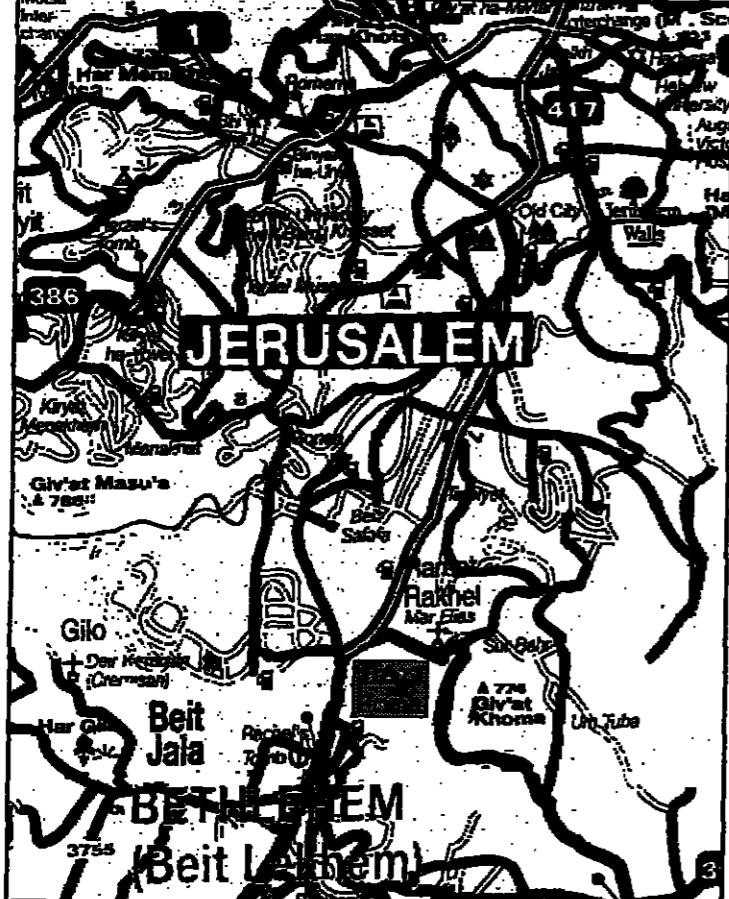

That's one way to look at it. "If Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu decides to build Har Homa, that is a declaration of war against the Palestinians," Faisal Hussein was quoted as saying. "If Netanyahu decides on the establishment of the neighborhood, it will prove that he does not want peace and is not willing to honor agreements - something that will lead to the collapse of the peace process."

That's the other way. What is at stake, at least on a superficial level, are some 6,300 housing units to be spread over 1,850 dunams of scenic real estate at the southeastern reaches of the capital. What is at stake, at a deeper level, is perhaps sovereignty over the city, and the establishment of all important territorial contiguity.

Har Homa sits, at least in part, on a wooded hill at the very southern edge of the city. It is visible to the east as one approaches the IDF roadblock to Bethlehem. It forms part of that pastoral, rolling-hill, biblical-looking landscape so often depicted in those turn-of-the-century drawings of the Holy City.

In 1991, then finance minister Yitzhak Moda'i signed an order calling for the expropriation of 1,850 dunams of land on Har Homa for the "public need." What differentiated this expropriation from other massive land expropriations to build new neighborhoods in Jerusalem in the late 1960s and 1970s, was that this time most of the land - 1,400 dunams of it - was taken from Jewish landowners. The other 450 dunams were expropriated from Palestinians in neighboring Umm Tuba and Beit Sahur.

The project has passed all the various planning hurdles, and even an appeal to the High Court of Justice, and is now just waiting for Netanyahu's nod. Some 2,500 units are to be con-

On the drawing board

In addition to fighting for the building of Har Homa, the Land of Israel Front has also placed two other issues at the top of its agenda: the building of a project to link Jerusalem to Ma'ale Adumim in the northeast, and a series of roads linking the capital with the coastal plain.

The Ma'aleh Adumim Jerusalem project is, according to National Religious Party MK Hanan Porat, "more important than Har Homa."

This project, proposed for an area between the two cities called E-1, calls for the building of some 1,400 housing units and seven hotels with 3,000 hotel rooms.

By building this project, Israel will not only be creating a territorial link between the capital and the largest settlement in the territories, but will - perhaps even more importantly - prevent a territorial link between Bethlehem and Ramallah.

A territorial link is necessary for the establishment of a Palestinian state, Porat said. Anything preventing this will make it more difficult to create a Palestinian state.

The Ma'aleh Adumim municipality and the planning body in the Civil Administration have approved the master plan for this project, and it now must be approved by Defense Minister Yitzhak Mordechai. According to the Land of Israel Front, Mordechai has not done anything about the project for seven months.

Ma'aleh Adumim Mayor Benny Kashriel said that the failure to move on the project signals to him that the government wants to keep open the option of a Palestinian state.

The other project the Front is concentrating on is the construction of road number 45, which will run from the Ben Shimon area to Pisgat Ze'ev, and then to Mishor Adumim.

Work on parts of this road has already begun, and at a meeting of the Ministerial Committee on Jerusalem on Tuesday, it was decided to "advance the paving of this road."

Besides easing congestion on the main Jerusalem-Tel Aviv highway, this road is also designed to prevent territorial contiguity between a number of Palestinian villages in the Ramallah area.

In addition, it will also keep the Jerusalem neighborhoods of Neveh Ya'acov and Pisgat Ze'ev from being completely encircled - and, in a worst-case scenario, cut off - by Palestinian villages and neighborhoods. H.K.

Force 17 tests Netanyahu

One of the criticisms of Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu heard most often on the right is that he cannot stand up to pressure - not pressure from David Levy, not pressure from Bill Clinton, not pressure from Yasser Arafat.

Can he withstand pressure from Michael Kleiner?

The birth last week of an ad-hoc parliamentary lobby called Force 17, is an attempt to put the prime minister to the test. "The message we are sending Netanyahu," said Likud-Gesher MK Kleiner, the unofficial head of this group, "is that if he builds in Jerusalem, we will be his security net. But if he doesn't build, we will not see any reason to support him." Kleiner prefers to call the group the Land of Israel Front, rather than Force 17, with its unfortunate name association to the elite PLO unit that guards Yasser Arafat.

Just as Yisrael Ba'aliya sees its role as looking after the interests of the new immigrants, and Shas sees itself as looking after the interests of the Sephardim, so the Land of Israel Front sees as its role looking after the interests of the Land of Israel, Kleiner said. "Our job is to preserve what we can [of Eretz Yisrael], and place political pressure on Netanyahu."

The name of the group, Force 17, refers to the 17 Knesset members who voted against the Hebron redeployment. Kleiner said that the number of MKs who agree with the group's position on Jerusalem is nearly twice that number.

"When Rabin went to Clinton, he could always say that there were things he just could not do because of opposition from the Likud. Up until now there was no similar opposition to Netanyahu," Kleiner said.

It was no coincidence that 13 MKs of Force 17 went on their tour of Har Homa and other points of contention this week guided by the leaders of the Council of Jewish Communities in Judea, Samaria and Gaza. The council, which for months has been debating how best to pressure the prime minister to "return to himself," has been active behind the scenes trying to bring together the various MKs to form a real political threat to Netanyahu.

And, insists Kleiner, the group is not bluffing in its threats to vote against the government. "If we are not willing to go all the way, we won't get anything," he said.

Kleiner dismissed the notion of a national unity government as an "empty gun," saying that if such a government is created, the Likud will - in an attempt to underscore its differences with Labor - "once again become the Likud" and move Netanyahu right.

"The government is supposed to act according to its plank, and in line with its ideology," Kleiner said. "If it doesn't, it has no reason to exist. I have never supported a Meretz-led government, and will not be a part of a coalition that adopts Meretz's policies." H.K.

Celebrity row

It's just 36 hours since her release from prison and Esmat Abu Saa seems a trifle dazed. At Ramallah City Hall where festivities are in full swing she is one of a dozen women on celebrity row.

Imprisoned for conspiring to kidnap a soldier, she was released on February 12 along with 29 other Palestinian women as part of the interim peace agreement. Now she shakes hands demurely with strangers, gets up from her seat to receive the hugs of old friends and poses for photos with wide-eyed teenage girls in school uniform. It's easy to imagine her as a movie star or pop singer visiting her home town.

There was a rousing reception in Ramallah when the bus full of women arrived in the wee hours of the morning. Even Palestinian Authority Chairman Yasser Arafat came out to greet them. When Abu Saa finally reached her home in Tulkarm, she found it filled with friends and relatives.

And now, on her second day of freedom, she is again surrounded by well-wishers, at a City Hall reception sponsored by the Ramallah-based Association of Women's Committees for Social Work, Fatah's social-welfare organization.

The walls are festooned with banners proclaiming the community's pride in the "brave women prisoners." Abu Saa sits in a seat

Released Palestinian women prisoners are being feted as heroines, but their society may not be ready for the challenges they pose to traditional gender roles, Esther Hecht writes of honor, dressed in fashionable beige trousers and a tweedy brown sweater, a shawl with traditional cross-stitch in the colors of the Palestinian flag draped over her shoulders.

Men and women in holiday finery circulate with baskets of sweets and trays of cakes. High-ranking PA officials - including Ahmed Tibi, adviser to Arafat, and Yasser Abed Rabbo, PA Minister of Culture, Arts and Information - arrive to pay their respects.

There will be several more parties and receptions, as groups vie to honor the women. But when the celebrations are over, the former prisoners will return to a traditional, patriarchal society.

It is a society in which men seeking wives through the only personal-ads service available, in the popular magazine Fosta, invariably say "virgin" is their first criterion. It is a society that has little use for strong-willed, outspoken women, and certainly not for women who believe they are the equals of men.

Yet that is how these women see themselves. In their long discussions in prison about the role of women, Abu Saa says, they "persuaded one another that there is no difference between men and women."

Their shared experience also made the women - Christians and Moslems, single and married - closer than sisters. As Abu Saa puts it, "We are like one hand; we are like one body."

That bonding was so strong that the 22 prisoners whose sentences were commuted in October 1995 refused to leave unless all the rest of them went free. Last week, the 30 women who were to be freed refused to go without the last four, until the four urged them to leave.

Now they are returning to a community that is, at best, ambivalent toward them, according to Ghada Zughayar, who until recently headed The Jerusalem Center for Women. For Zughayar, this attitude is rooted in the immaturity of Palestinian culture and its failure, under the Palestinian Authority, to develop democratic norms.

"There have been lots of speeches and slogans proclaiming commitment to the equality of women, democracy and a progressive society, but these are just lip service," she says. Last year's elections to the Palestinian Legislative Council, in which only five out of 28 women candidates won, is yet another sign of this failure.

And AP reported that one of the Palestinian delegates to the 1995 UN Conference on Women in Beijing said PA officials had told them to focus on their suffering under Israeli rule and to play down issues like domestic violence and the unequal treatment of women under local laws.

Huneida Ghanim, a graduate student in sociology at the Hebrew University, sees more specific reasons for the inability of Palestinian society to accept women prisoners fully. This society is still founded on the functional and spatial separation of the sexes, she argues in a paper delivered last month in Jerusalem at a symposium on Women and Crime, sponsored by the university's Institute of Criminology. Her findings are based on interviews with 30 women who were prisoners between 1967 and 1987.

The public sphere belongs to men; the private sphere belongs to women, but is subject to domination by men, Ghanim explains in her paper. (She refused to be interviewed for this article.) The values of family honor, which are intimately connected to women's modesty, are the most important mechanisms that preserve this division, and violating these values injures the entire family.

Since prison is considered part of the masculine domain, Palestinian women prisoners were the first to challenge the strict division between spheres. Thus, although they were considered national heroines, they were also seen as having endangered their own and their families' honor, by encroaching on the masculine sphere, far from the supervision of their families.

The word spread quickly that two women prisoners were raped in the Jerusalem lockup in the '60s, Ghanim says, and the primary concern of women's families was possible exposure to sexual assault. So they discouraged their daughters from becoming politically active, for fear of imprisonment and the possible loss of reputation.

Once they were imprisoned, however, women used phrases like "sister of men" to describe their courage. But using language that defined themselves in relation to men only served to strengthen male supremacy, Ghanim says.

The families of women prisoners have found ways to cope with their daughters' imprisonment, but the society as a whole has not, Ghanim concludes. Released prisoners are not considered preferred marriage partners, and she heard the following complaint again and again from her interviewees:

"Even a man who took an active part in the struggle will seek for a marriage partner a young girl who does not endanger herself by engaging in political activity, and most important of all, who does not argue with him about anything."

RAWDA ODEH, 48, who has done time herself, has no such problem in identifying with the prisoners. She spent four years behind bars for trying, as a member of George Habash's Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, to poison a man she suspected of being a collaborator. Soon after her release, she was detained again for six months for membership of the PFLP.

When Odeh was arrested in 1969, there was no women's prison, and she spent her first two years in a section of Nablus men's prison, which was ill-equipped to house women. There, she says, 18 women shared a cell of 20 square meters. A bucket in the corner served as a toilet. They were allowed showers only once a month.

Odeh says she was one of two leaders in Nablus prison who organized hunger strikes to obtain books, better food, and time outside in the yard.

In fact, Odeh's struggle for better conditions began in Jerusalem's Russian Compound lockup, while she awaited trial.

She had feared all along she might be caught, and the PFLP had prepared her for incarceration. "Everything I saw in prison, I knew about beforehand," she says. But the reality of it shocked her. She met the two women who said they had been raped.

In her month-long interrogation at the Russian Compound, she encountered prostitutes for the first time. She saw them take off their clothes and hug the policemen, she recalls. Their behavior was as incomprehensible as it was offensive to her. "In our society, if a woman [even] talks to a man who is a neighbor, they can kill us."

She began a hunger strike, demanding to be separated from the Israeli women. After 13 days her demands were met. Only afterwards, she says, did she realize that holding her with prostitutes was just a means of intimidating her. Thus, according to Odeh, the pressure to leave political activism to men came from both the Israelis and the Palestinians. "The Israelis threatened our ard," she says, using one of the words that denote family honor. "Our mothers and sisters had told us the only thing we must keep is our ard."

By the time of the intifada, however, loss of family honor was less of a real threat, Abu Saa says. "In the '70s, the interrogators used sexual punishment. My parents knew it wouldn't happen now."

Like Abu Saa, Odeh came out of prison with a strong feminist stance, but tied, as Ghanim points out, to the culture of national struggle. "I'm proud to be a woman and I want to convince my people that a woman is the same as a man. I am a woman for my husband. With other men, I relate to them as equal."

"It's my right to do the same job as men. In a revolution you need everyone - men and women - to win."

BETWEEN THE rhetoric and the reality, however, falls the shadow of a society in which male dominance remains an entrenched value.

"Most Palestinian men who want a woman in the house do not want her to share their lives or to be equal to them," Odeh says. The fact that some former inmates have never married can be attributed in part to their having been in prison, she adds.

According to Odeh, some of the released prisoners of her generation also had trouble finding work, but she attributes this to employers' fears of trouble with the Israeli authorities.

Since the establishment of the PA, however, this has changed. Rana Kanaan, for example, who was released in 1995, found work as a PA customs clerk at Allenby Bridge. Women affiliated with Fatah have even found high-ranking jobs, Odeh says. Arafat promised to find jobs in the PA for the recently released prisoners, she adds, and he asked Social Affairs Minister Intisar Wizar (known popularly as Um Jihad) to make sure that those who had no marketable skills receive job training.

Even Abu Saa believes her time in prison will stand her in good stead: "I hope [having been] in prison will help me get a job," she says. In fact, she believes Palestinian society is changing and will have a place for her.

But now, all Abu Saa and her parents want, she says, is for her to complete her undergraduate studies in English: "All their hopes and dreams are for me to graduate."

Abu Saa was in her third year at An-Najah University in Nablus when she was arrested the first time and sentenced to 20 months' imprisonment for possession of a knife. "I had an idea to use it against a soldier," she says in her steady, quiet voice, with the emphasis on the word "idea," as if it had as little substance as the smoke rising from her cigarette.

She returned to the university, studied one more semester, then was arrested again, this time for conspiring to kidnap a soldier to effect the release of other women prisoners. Like the first time, she insists "it was just an idea."

Before her release this time, Abu

Saa signed a commitment to support the peace process and refrain from terrorism, and she has learned this catechism by heart. Can Israelis and Palestinians live alongside each other? "I believe it's possible," she responds, with a ring of conviction. "The truest way is coexistence."

She has less than a year to go to finish her degree. Then, perhaps, she will teach English. And perhaps then she will also consider marriage. When she was in prison the first time, men would come around to her parents' home asking for her hand. "My parents said: 'She will go back to the university, and then she will think about this.'"

In any case, at 30, she seems in no rush to marry, perhaps because of the powerful feminist message she has brought away with her from prison.

Mothers of terror victims outraged and bitter

Last week's release of several Palestinian women prisoners, including the murderers of a number of Israelis, has struck a bitter chord among relatives of terror victims, particularly bereaved mothers.

Gracia Manos, whose son David was killed in 1984 by Lamia Maruf, set free by the Israeli authorities last week, was among those shocked by the government's decision to release the prisoners. "For what did they release this awful woman, so she could be a terrorist?" she bewailed.

"The whole idea of releasing prisoners was completely wrong," explained Yehudit Dosberg, whose daughter and son-in-law were killed when their car was ambushed on a road in the territories last June, five days after Netanyahu's election. "These are not prisoners of war, they are criminals and murderers, [whose] release shows that this peace is above the law."

Dosberg made clear that she was against all types of murder, including those by Jews, but asserted that the release signaled to the world that Arab blood was more valuable than Jewish blood. "This peace obligates us and not them. It cannot be in Israel that half the people are above the law and half are not. It takes the justice out of this peace."

Joyce Boim, another mother of a terror victim, also insisted that release of the murderers was "a travesty of justice."

"It is utterly ridiculous [to release the Palestinian murderers] while our Jewish prisoners that were going to defend or avoid a blood-bath are sitting in jail," she added, referring to the Jewish murderers sitting in Israeli jails for carrying out acts of terror against Palestinians.

"As a mother who lost a child whose murderer still hasn't been brought to justice, it hurts," Boim said, deeming it inappropriate to adopt a conciliatory attitude toward the Palestinians.

"The prime minister promised in a meeting with us that after the Hebron withdrawal the issue of bringing terrorists to justice would be at the top of the agenda," lamented Aryeh Bachrach, whose son was murdered in Wadi Kelt. He asserted that the government's action betrayed ill will toward his and other such families, pointing out that it was unnecessary to release an additional six Palestinian women who were not required to be set free according to the terms of the Oslo agreement.

"One of my son's murderers is a tour guide in Hebron," complained Yehudit Gross. She described how another one of her son's murderers was released in a prisoner exchange several years ago and then went to Egypt where he perpetrated an attack against a group of Israeli tourists that left several civilians dead.

"I don't think the release is fair because we haven't seen any reciprocity on the Palestinian side," argued Gross. "I want peace, but this is not real peace. If we would have unity of all Jews and respect for our one another, then we would merit God's granting us a real peace." - Uriel Heilman

Little remorse

All the Palestinian women prisoners released last week signed a commitment to support the peace process and not to engage in terrorism. But journalists who asked them what they would say to the families of terror-attack victims got a stock response.

"I have nothing to say to the wife of Zvi Klein," retorted Abeer Wahidi, 27, sentenced five years ago to 17 years' imprisonment for her part in the killing of the Ofra resident.

"Does the Israeli soldier say anything to the Palestinian woman whose son he has killed?"

A member of an earlier generation of Palestinian women prisoners, Rawda Odeh, refuses to speak of any of the recently released women as killers or terrorists. "Revolutionaries" and "heroines" are the terms she insists on using, and she has no regrets for her own attempt to poison a man she says was a collaborator.

In 1994, Odeh responded to the number 5 bus attack in Tel Aviv, in which 22 people were killed and 48 were wounded, with horrified fascination, but no emotion. "I cried so much during the intifada for what the soldiers did, and when I saw what happened on the buses, I couldn't help but watch how [their families] were crying. I didn't rejoice, but I didn't cry."

Planning U.S. Travel This Summer?

The U.S. Consulate General in Jerusalem advises those planning travel to the U.S. this summer to apply early for U.S. visas, renewal of U.S. passports, and registration of children as U.S. citizens.

Unavoidable gaps caused by staff rotation will result in long lines and extended processing time during the busy summer months. To lessen the possibilities of long waits or delayed travel plans, it is suggested that potential travellers apply before May 1.

Visa services and registration of children as American citizens are available at 27 Nablus Road, Monday through Friday (except the last Friday of every month) 8:30 a.m. through 11:00 a.m. U.S. passports can be renewed Monday through Friday (except the last Friday), 8:30 a.m. through 12 noon.

For information on passport renewal by mail, call 622-7200.

Parents in distress

Before the findings of the Ivy Commission on the cause of this month's helicopter crash were made public, copies of its report were passed to the government — and to the families of the 73 soldiers.

Not surprisingly, last weekend the media was rife with parental reactions to the commission's findings. Some, like Idan Alper's father, were upset — he felt his son was the victim of disorganization; others, like the family of Moshe Musalem, were hopeful that the commission's report would prevent future tragedies.

Whatever their reactions, one thing was clear: the spotlight was on the families. This is just one of the many ways over the last two decades in which parents have become more involved in their children's military service.

Take hot lines, for example. In the aftermath of the helicopter crash "The Listening Ear," a national hot line open for all types of problems, received dozens of calls from distressed parents. Shmuel, one of the volunteers manning the phones (he won't give his last name because the organization maintains anonymity on both ends of the phone lines) says, "We listen to them, their worries and their fears. Sometimes these people have no one to talk to."

Raya Harlick tends to agree. Since her son was killed in Lebanon in the Eighties, she has found herself with her own personal open line for parents who were worried about their sons or who wanted to talk about sons who had fallen. She says that every new tragedy, like this month's helicopter crash, reopens old wounds: "These people call me because they have no official address. I do the minimum I can do," she says. "I think there should be a professional body to which I can refer them."

Perhaps the new hot line which sprang up after the helicopter crash will take some of the volume of those calls. In what they thought would be a one-time event after the crash, the Center for Parenting and Families in the Community for the State Teachers' College in coordination with the Education Ministry set up a hot line to listen to concerns of soldiers' parents. The hot line was so inundated with calls that they continued it a second and third

Today the IDF has to deal not just with soldiers serving in Lebanon, but with their families as well. Amy Klein reports week and have now decided to make it a weekly event. Every Tuesday, from 5:30 to 9:30 p.m., parents of soldiers can call in and voice their worries and problems to professionals (03-690-2375/6778).

"We saw that there was a strong need for support for the parents of soldiers," says Haim Amit, who heads the Center for Parenting and Families in the Community. He said that most of the callers were mothers, and their calls can be divided into two categories: The first call as a result of fear. "People were calling with panic attacks. Knocking knees, heart palpitations, insomnia. They complain that they every phone call sends them into a panic because they think it's the call," Amit says that the counselor in these cases listens. "It's easy for people to talk to a stranger. They don't want to talk about it with their children because they don't want their children to worry."

The second type of calls, says Amit, are from parents who are worried about their children's problems. "One mother called me about her son who is afraid to step into a helicopter. Another one said that her son seems introverted and depressed. Should she talk to him?" In both cases, Amit says, the parents' first concern are their children — how to deal with these issues in a way that will put the least pressure on them.

A good proportion of the phone calls were from new immigrants. The hot line is staffed by Hebrew, Russian and Amharic speakers. "A lot of them have a great fear of the army, they don't want their kids to go into infantry," He tells of one caller who said she tore up her son's draft orders; another caller said she was trying, behind her son's back, to get him out of the army. Other new immigrants, he says, simply don't know the answers to some practical issues like how to get their children a postponement while they study.

Ruthi Brenner, an immigrant from the US, doesn't know how she will survive her three sons' army service. Her eldest son is about to join the paratroopers.

"I've dreaded this moment for many years. Now I will have that constant dread, for that fateful knock on the door." She has taken out an ad for a weekly support group "for mothers whose sons are serving in dangerous places to share our thoughts and fears."

All this parental confusion should mean that the Center for Parenting and Families in the Community's new course, which is set to open in April for parents of soldiers, will probably be filled to the gills. The eight-part course (half lectures, half workshops), which was planned some time ago with the Education Ministry, will deal with issues facing parents with children in the army, such as what if a parent doesn't want their son to enter an infantry unit but the son wants to, or vice versa. The course will be free for parents whose children are serving in infantry units.

Amit says, "The parents in infantry are the most important part, but they are the most neglected."

An IDF spokeswoman says that "the IDF has no intention of starting a support system for parents. Civilians are taken care of by civilian mental-health services." Even so, the army does recognize the important role the parents play in the lives of the soldiers. "We aim to inform the public and to enlist the participation of the family to obtain their support."

"There is a trend of growing parental involvement in what is happening in the unit," says Dr. Efraim Inbar, director of the Begin-Sadat Center for Strategic Studies at Bar-Ilan University. "To some extent the IDF has encouraged it as part of the PR campaign — they opened up bases for visits, they encouraged soldiers to call home, they give out telephone numbers of the commanders, and there are days when parents can have discussions with the army."

Helen Linden, already worried about the army service of her 12-year-old son, recalls the Beit Lid bombings; War widow Mira Hermoni is active in Women and Mothers for Peace.

IT'S ALSO because the times have changed, says Dr. Ron Levy, former IDF chief psychologist. "Twenty years ago the army took an 18-year-old; everything that happened to him was to the individual. Today you can't take a soldier pretending he has no family."

Modern communication — telephones, mobile phones and television broadcasts which are more instantaneous and less strictly censored than they once were — puts the soldiers in close touch with their families.

But it's more than technological advance, says Dr. Oz Almog, a sociologist at the Jezreel Valley College: "Today the family is the central value of the 'yuppie-dom'; worry is part of the deep connection."

He adds: "Don't forget that today's parents were in the army and they know the system, and they don't take this with closed eyes."

Levy says that there is a delicate balance that must be maintained with parental involvement. "Sometimes it gets to be intervention — parents try to pull strings. The IDF doesn't like it, and there's a conflict. As long as the parents know the boundaries."

"This type of [over-] involvement," says Inbar, "is counterproductive. Parents might start to question operations."

Questioning operations is exactly the goal of many mothers. Around the country, there is an uprising of mothers who are afraid for their sons. But instead of support groups and hot lines, they are taking their fears to where army policy is made: the government.

"Women and Mothers for Peace," is an organization with branches in Jerusalem and Tel Aviv; it has garnered thousands of signatures across the country. "We are tired from the wars," says Mira Hermoni, an active member of the Jerusalem branch. Hermoni's husband was killed in the Yom Kippur War. Her son finished the army two years ago and now serves in reserves.

"It's not only my son I am concerned about," she explains. Their agenda is to remind the government — whichever one is in power — to fight for peace. After the helicopter crash, they want Lebanon to remain open for debate. "We want to know that our sons' presence there is justified. The crash was a signal — not necessarily to pull out, but to stop and think about it."

Women and Mothers for Peace is not allied with other organizations because they have a unique legitimacy as women whose sons are serving — or will serve in the future.

Helen Linden is a mother of three. Though her oldest is not yet 12, she is already worried about his service. She has participated in meetings of Women and Mothers for Peace, as well as another group called "Religious Mothers for the Sanctity of Life." Both organizations were pro-active in pushing for the Hebron agreements.

She says that all of the women "want a feeling that the government is concerned with the way they use the soldiers." With a husband in reserves serving in places such as Lebanon, she thinks it's important for the subject to be open for discussion.

It's a sign of a more open society — where telecommunications keeps everyone current, and the army is demystified because of parents who have served there — that a national debate can take place.

"With the debate, the pressure is increasing. I have no doubts in my mind that such a big catastrophe has a negative impact," says Inbar. "It has a tortuous effect on the willingness to support the struggle in southern Lebanon."

Though he also supports withdrawal from Lebanon, Almog thinks it should done quickly, without debate. "You are telling the enemy I am weak, I am not strong enough... and that's what they want... you should do it quietly."

Amit, in discussing why parents are more distressed today than they once were, gives credence to the argument that a public debate demoralizes the soldiers: "There was once a public consensus that the infantry was important. It allowed parents to feel part of something important."

Linden, who wants to know that her children will be serving in the army for causes she believes in, insists that a public debate is not only necessary but beneficial to the soldiers serving in Lebanon.

"The soldiers serving in the army have a whole array of political views, like the left-wing soldier serving in the West Bank or the right-wing soldier in Hebron. They each bring their own political opinions, but they follow the orders and do it. I'm sure they want to feel that there's discussion on both sides of the political spectrum."

How do you feel, Soldier?

Parents who have lost sons in the military are often concerned not only about their own worries, but the way that their sons are being treated in the military. The army has a reputation for being a tough place, and it's not always clear how the soldiers themselves get mental support.

Dr. Ron Levy, former IDF chief psychologist, says that the army does recognize the important role the parents play in the lives of the soldiers. "We aim to inform the public and to enlist the participation of the family to obtain their support."

There is a trend of growing parental involvement in what is happening in the unit, says Dr. Efraim Inbar, director of the Begin-Sadat Center for Strategic Studies at Bar-Ilan University. "To some extent the IDF has encouraged it as part of the PR campaign — they opened up bases for visits, they encouraged soldiers to call home, they give out telephone numbers of the commanders, and there are days when parents can have discussions with the army."

REW?

Breaking the ice

Israel and the US will be better able to weather future storms following Netanyahu's meeting with Clinton, reports Hillel Kuttler from Washington

For Binyamin Netanyahu, last week must have been what he imagined a prime minister's visit to Washington should be. It's a wonder what a period of calm and the perception of progress can do. The visit was characterized foremost by the absence of the major clouds lurking over two of Netanyahu's three previous trips here. It stood in stark contrast to last July's visit, when the Clinton administration was still fighting election shock syndrome. And unlike late September, riots were not just days behind, with all the attendant pressures for Netanyahu to deliver concessions in the White House summit with Yasser Arafat.

Netanyahu, he added, puts the Israelis and Americans in a better position to weather their inevitable disagreements ahead. But maybe not too far ahead. This week's evolving Har Homa controversy could be but a precursor to the big debates lurking as the first IDF redeployment occurs and final-status negotiations with the Palestinians commence in March. The consensus of interviews with a half-dozen current and former American officials involved in Middle East diplomacy is that three elements contributed substantially to Netanyahu's rehabilitation here:

The question now, of course, is how long Netanyahu's second honeymoon might last

In those instances, the US "put a positive cast on things," knowing full well that "that's not really where the relationship was," a senior US official conceded. This time, with the Hebron agreement having just been sealed and Netanyahu delivering a lopsided vote in Knesset, the atmosphere here was immeasurably improved. For the first time since Netanyahu took office, the administration believes that now, finally, it has a serious partner committed to and engaged fully in the process of making peace. The character of their dialogue with Netanyahu reached a positive enough level for one senior American official to term it an "honest discussion" - as opposed to the more familiar term "candid" talks - where the sides now know they are capable of "really working together, where you can find ways to really sort things out."

the Hebron deal, which cemented Netanyahu in the peace camp; the process leading up to the accord, which created a level of intimacy between the US and the new Israeli negotiators; and last Thursday's meeting with President Clinton, marked by an unprecedented depth of discussion between the two leaders.

According to the US official, the three-hour session was the "best of the visits we've had here" because it was the first where there was a genuine dialogue between Netanyahu and Clinton. Both Israeli and US officials maintain that news reports prior to the talks, that anticipated Netanyahu laying out in detail his approach to a final status agreement with the Palestinians, or even how the first redeployment will look, were not grounded in reality.

For the first time, Netanyahu cogently laid out Israel's security needs, with Clinton asking a number of probing questions. "Many of the things that were said, it was the first time they were said," the official commented of Netanyahu's overview, which included a lengthy meeting with Clinton one-on-one. "It wasn't him coming in and saying: 'This is the way it's gonna be.' This was a presentation that was reasonable," the official said. "The reason the president said he was encouraged was because of the cast of mind, the cast of feeling, the character of the exchange. It convinced the president there's a genuine desire to move forward. And you [Netanyahu] don't share those kinds of considerations unless you're serious."

Netanyahu's seriousness in progressing with the PA extended beyond Hebron, said the official, pointing to the recent release of 30 Palestinian female prisoners, along with the VAT agreement with the Palestinians. Officials acknowledge now that somewhere along the trying path to the Hebron deal's culmination in mid-January, the realization hit that Netanyahu was committed to what one called a "level of seriousness."

"It was the process that began to change the image [to one] of the readiness to live up to commitments," said former US ambassador to Israel Samuel Lewis. "Whether he gets through the Bar-On affair is more significant than anything he can go through here."

Former National Security Council official Geoffrey Kemp attributed the more optimistic tone in the bilateral relationship to a simple realization: "The prime minister has made some genuine concessions, or statesmanlike acts, which are very much appreciated."

Or, as a former official stated: "The guy four months ago [following the September riots] was in the dog house in Washington and tried

Ezer takes tea with the Queen

On the eve of President Weizman's visit to London, Barry Rubin argues that Israeli-British relations are in a healthy state - for now

It's long overdue, but Israel's president is finally going to play the palace. Ezer Weizman's stay as a guest in Buckingham Palace next week is a good indication of the excellent state of Israeli-British relations today. Yet the fact that the first state visit is coming a half-century after Israel's independence also shows how problematic this relationship has been.

During his historic trip, which begins next Tuesday, Weizman will be feted by Queen Elizabeth, Prime Minister John Major, and other British leaders. As an alumnus of the Royal Air Force, he will be an honored visitor to its most advanced base. And Weizman's call at the Imperial War Museum's new wing commemorating the Holocaust is going to call attention to a belated British focus on that colossal tragedy.

Historically, of course, there were also non-strategic factors contributing to suspicion and coldness toward Israel. Despite such honorable exceptions as Winston Churchill and Harold Wilson, British political and social life has been permeated by negative attitudes toward Jews. The Conservative Party was a preserve of snobbish antisemitism while the Labor Party was affected by a strident leftism that also seemed rooted in anti-Jewish sentiments. Traditionally British Jews largely supported Labor. Although the party felt a strong affinity for its Israeli counterpart, its virulently

From being responsible mainly for maintaining good British-Arab relations, the Foreign Ministry increasingly seeks to play a role as mediator in the Middle East. Similarly, threats arising from Middle East radical regimes, terrorism, weapons of mass destruction, and Islamic revolutionary movements also make for more parallel Israeli and British interests.

As anyone who has seen the very accurate comedy series Yes, Minister knows, the civil service actually governs much of the time. Even career bureaucrats have begun to understand that any political settlement must be acceptable to Israel and cannot just be imposed on it.

Both in its own right and as part of the EU, Britain wants to play a bigger role in Middle East diplomacy. Yet as long as it demonstrates Israeli contentions of bias, the Europeans forfeit that chance. That's why the British and other governments were so embarrassed by President Jacques Chirac's opportunistic attacks on Israel.

It is easy to take successful relations between the two countries for granted, given Britain's consistent support for US policy. But it is also possible to overlook them, given the continuing general hostility of British diplomatic and academic institutions and the media toward Israel. Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu's election last May intensified (or provided a fresh excuse for) this antagonism, while also causing serious concern for the British government about the peace process's fate.

The Hebron agreement has, at least temporarily, quieted official criticism. But other, longer-term factors have also been at work anti-Israel period in the 1970s and 1980s made that orientation increasingly uncomfortable.

But even before the breakthroughs in the peace process in the early 1990s, prime minister Margaret Thatcher played a key role for making a pro-Israel policy acceptable in mainstream British politics. Major has essentially continued this orientation. The presence of Malcolm Rifkind, a Jewish politician with a record of support for Israel, in top-level cabinet posts is also a sign of this change, though he has been personally careful to display even-handedness.

Nowadays, British political life is understandably obsessed with the forthcoming general elections.

Foreign policy plays virtually no role in this battle. Still, a change in government could also mean a cooling of relations with Israel, if the left wing of Labor has influence over policy. Labor Party leaders deny that this will happen. Even if there is a difference, it will probably not mean a big situation.

In terms of British intellectual institutions, change is slower and not always so visible. A few years ago, a leading British Middle East expert commented, "The Foreign Ministry is the world's last stronghold of Pan-Arab nationalism." Today, this characterization still has some truth.

But there are also signs that Whitehall is going through an evolution similar to that of the American State Department.

UNIVERSITIES AND research centers have also shifted somewhat in their attitude toward Israel. A decade ago, any academic involved in regional studies who dared have a favorable view of the Jewish state - which might even mean supporting its existence - was isolated and reviled. Today, the situation has become more open and at least somewhat diverse; for example, in Middle East, Mediterranean, and strategic studies.

The atmosphere is still quite hostile, certainly compared to American standards. One of Britain's leading political journals, International Affairs, has just published two full-length articles, one advocating Israel's elimination and replacement by a single Arab-Jewish state, and a further article attacking US policy as single-mindedly and self-destructively pro-Israel and anti-Arab.

Lagging behind even this situation, albeit again with many exceptions, is much of the British media. A recent television documentary, charged, using terms reminiscent of Shylock or Fagin, that wealthy Jews are taking money from poor Americans and funneling it to settlements in the territories.

Often, British journalists do not even bother to interview Israelis, while quoting Palestinian critics at great length.

Going after Netanyahu as a hardliner often seems merely an eagerly accepted rationale for bashing Israel.

The pattern of events has become so predictable as to be almost amusing.

A successful advance for the peace process, predicated on Israeli concessions, leads to several weeks or months of rejoicing and positive statements about Israel.

This is followed by a new set of tough Israel-Palestinian negotiations setting off new condemnations of Israeli intransigence and calls for pressure.

Thus, we might be in a fleeting oasis of good feeling that will prove to be a mirage. But with Elizabeth and Ezer dining together at last, there could be some irreversible progress as well.

AN EMOTIONAL APPEAL FROM 19 YEAR OLD NOA ESTHER SCHWARTZ TO THOSE WHO HAVE LENT THEIR ASSISTANCE TO SAVE HER LIFE

Greetings and may G-d bless you all. I turn to you in this emotional appeal for your assistance. Some of you know me personally, but most of you are only familiar with the story of the wonderful journey to save my life from cancer, which was detected on the eve of my Bar Mitzvah, first in my right leg and which later spread to both my lungs. You, as guardian angels, joined us by generously helping my devoted parents and brothers provide me with the best medical treatment money can buy: emotional strength and physical stamina. Together we climbed the steep mountain of difficult chemotherapy treatments and 10 operations in 6.5 years on my leg and lungs. I have been very fortunate, thank G-d, and at present, I am taking my first steps on my own two feet, as a medical student.

For me, this is the realization of a dream and the answer to my prayers to the Almighty while on my sick-bed. It was at that time, that I decided that if the Almighty would grant me a full recovery from this terrible disease, I would, with G-d's help, devote myself to the study of medicine. In this way, I would try to one day return to the hospital in which I was treated, this time as a medical doctor, in order to offer quality medical treatment to those suffering, and specifically to those unfortunate children hospitalized with the terrible disease I suffered from.

I was at death's door, and personally experienced the meaning of suffering and great experienced by the patient and his or her family. I believe that with G-d's help, I will be able to be a source of encouragement and faith, and a personal example of how, with G-d's help, there is hope and a bright future for a child who unfortunately is stricken with a malignant disease. One must fight and hope for G-d's salvation, even if the road to recovery is hard and fraught with much suffering and stress.

I am about to undergo another operation on my right knee, to alleviate the excruciating pain caused by the erosion of my knee cap by the 25cm extendable metal rod, which was developed and planted in my leg at the Royal National Orthopaedic Hospital in London. This implant prevented the amputation of my right leg up to the middle of my thigh. The knee surgery is scheduled to be performed by Professor Marc Mathias of Belgium, a world renowned specialist in knee surgery. I still need ongoing respiratory rehabilitation, following the two serious and complex lung surgeries I have undergone in 1993 and 1994, at London's Royal Brompton Hospital which specializes in the treatment of lung diseases. During those surgeries, half (1/2) of my right lung and a third (1/3) of my left lung were removed, due to the metastases detected in my lungs as a result of the tumor in my leg.

Dr. Peter Goldstein, F.R.C.S. consultant in thoracic surgery and director of surgery at the Royal Brompton Hospital is personally responsible for the follow-up assessment of my lung functioning every 4 months. "Brompton Hospital" has a unique medical apparatus, the "CT Intron" which is the only machine of its kind which can perform an assessment of any macro-processes of the lung.

Two inaccurate diagnoses, which almost cost me my life, were made in Israel in 1993 and 1994, using other equipment. That is the main reason for the British physicians demand that the follow-up be performed only at the "Brompton Hospital" in London.

As you know, I can not be assessed using the MRI, due to the presence of the metal implant in my leg.

My parents and brothers have stood steadfastly by my side these past difficult 6.5 years and have invested all their energy. My dear father has invested super human efforts in the study of the medical information, in medical consultations and in the search for a way to maximize the degree of success in saving my life, my lungs and leg, and to provide me with the best possible chance of returning to live a normal life. My father is currently paying the price of all the anxiety and terrible burden, and unfortunately, he too is not as healthy as he was six years ago.

He is experiencing physical and economic difficulties, as a time when I still need his assistance, his advice and devotion to my cause.

As scheduled, I will leave for London, Germany and Belgium in Adar 'A' 5757 - February 1997, for follow-up assessments of my lungs and for a scheduled operation on my knee, with G-d's help.

I turn to you in an emotional appeal. Please help us in such a way as you can to cover the cost of the vital medical expenses which help save my life, and ease my daily functioning. We do not receive any institutional assistance, and except for a small portion provided by "Kupat Holim Medical Fund" we must carry the burden on our own.

This vital assistance can be transferred to the following addresses:

A) THE SAVE NOA ESTHER SCHWARTZ FUND, 8 Haray Underman Street Patach Tilva Israel 49270
B) The Parents: Moshe and Hava Schwartz, P.O. Box 1098 Central Post Office, Hovel Hasharon 46100
C) Directly to the Bank account of the "Fund For Rescuing Noa Esther Schwartz", account no. 531570.
Medical information will be provided upon request by Dr. Moshe Schwartz, Fax: 09-9616947.

MIDDLE ISRAEL

By AMOTZ ASA-EL

Don it proudly, Madeleine

Just take a late afternoon stroll along the Vitava between the Manesov and Karlov bridges, and allow the surrounding castles, rocks and piazzas to wink, peep and snarl at you; soon enough, you too will fall prey to Prague's mystique.

Whenever she climbed yet another rung on America's academic, diplomatic and political ladders, Albright openly exhibited her Bohemian descent, and hailed her adopted homeland for allowing "the daughter of a Czech refugee" to climb so high as she had.

Albright to portray herself as a victim of Fascism and communism. Yet what she really was - and remains - is a victim of anti-Semitism.

Had she not been the well-educated and intensely cosmopolitan woman she evidently is, one could have taken at face value the secretary's insistence that all her life she had had "no inkling of her Jewishness."

Yet people far less well-read and globe-trotted than her would reflexively suspect that behind an upper-middle-class family's abrupt flight from Czechoslovakia in the late 1930s, and the untimely deaths of all its grandparents in the 1940s, lurks the same Jewish fate which afflicted, for instance, this writer's four Czechoslovak grandparents.

Whether or not this failed exercise in escapism was originally Albright's or her parents' is immaterial; what matters is that in terms of the fear, shame and utility considerations which apparently had generated it, Albright should long ago have realized it was time to get her real ethnicity out of the closet.

Fortunately, half a millennium after the Spanish Inquisition and two generations after Nuremberg, to hide one's Jewishness has become an anachronism across the civilized world, where many eyebrows were raised in light of the Washington Post's findings concerning Albright's peculiar story.

In an America where in recent years assorted Greenspans, Rubins, Reichs, Rivlins, Ghickmans, Bergers, Kantors, Indyks, Rosses and Cohens have been assuming key government positions routinely, the sudden appearance of a kind of neo-Marrano is about as natural as Aryeh Deri joining the Supreme Court, Albright would have done well to look at the numerous openly Jewish officials who fill the administration of which she is a part, and understand that for her to fear the consequences of her ancestry becoming known is no longer rational.

Moreover, past fears here that a Jewish secretary of state - eager to prove his or her impartiality - would am-twist Israel into far-fung concessions, have also lost much of their relevance; the West Bank and Gaza are pretty much gone, and what will happen with the Golan is also well known by now to any political novice.

YET NOT only should her roots not scare Albright, but in fact she has plenty of which to be proud in that regard. Few ethnic groups produced so many luminaries as did Czech Jewry, from medieval theologian Yom-Tov Lipman and early-modern mystic philosopher Judah Loew - creator of Prague's mythical Golem, the beast which once went on a rampage until its master stuck in its mouth a note with God's full name - to 20th-century authors Franz Kafka, Franz Werfel and Max Brod. These, like most Czech Jews, had a frequently dialectic relationship with their neighboring cultures. Lipman wrote a major work of anti-Christian polemics, but regularly associated with non-Jewish scholars.

Judah Loew, according to the legend, had to create the Golem in order to defend the ever-vulnerable Jews of Prague, but he also held a philosophical dialogue with Emperor Rudolph II. Kafka, while arguably the most influential Czech writer ever, wrote in German; and, not coincidentally, his heroes obsessively searched for their identities.

Beyond those fear and shame factors, Albright should have realized that while millions along the centuries have managed to hide, deny and indeed extinguish their Jewishness, when it came to the kind of prominence she has now reached, her many predecessors didn't even attempt to hide their roots; when it comes to power, talent and publicity, they knew, the Jew in you would ultimately show.

Such were, for instance, Walter Rathenau, the Weimar Republic foreign minister who, though a firm believer in assimilation, made no secret of his origins and even began learning Hebrew, shortly before he was assassinated by nationalists who doubted his patriotism; or Benjamin Disraeli, who was compelled to be baptized in order to pave the way for the illustrious political career he ultimately had, but even so proudly sported his Jewish identity; or French prime minister Leon Blum, who not only took pride in his Jewishness but in fact declared himself a Zionist.

In the US, to be sure, politicians were never assassinated for their Jewishness, nor expected to be baptized in order to assume federal office. And the religious-ethnic tolerance which America's founding fathers have so successfully nurtured has over the past two centuries permeated entire continents.

There is, of course, the exception of various Middle Eastern regimes which, for instance, nonchalantly shelter such a Nazi criminal as Alois Brunner - friend, colleague and mentor of those who killed Secretary Albright's grandparents.

Indeed, in this part of the world, where Jews are still widely viewed through the same binoculars, depicted with the same brushes, and stained with the same poison ink as those used by Goebbels, Albright would be right to feel uneasy about her newly discovered roots.

A VIEW FROM NOV

By MOSHE KOHN

Enough is enough. This James A. Bill, professor of government, and director of international studies at the venerable College of William and Mary, Williamsburg, Virginia, and Prof. Robert Springborg of Macquarie University, Sydney Australia, coauthors of Politics in the Middle East (hereafter referred to as B/S), have written to my editor concerning my two columns of criticism of their book (December 6 and January 17). I discussed a few of the large number of sins of commission and omission in the book's 74-page chapter 7 on "The Arab-Israeli Connection."

Indeed, "Enough is enough," I say to Bill and Springborg and to those who approve of the book's use as a textbook, rather than as a specimen of specious "Palestinian" historiography.

The authors challenge my assertion that they rely "almost exclusively on radical left, post-Zionist, anti-Zionist, anti-Israeli, Jewish, Arab and other sources." They say they "attempted to draw upon as wide a variety of literature as possible" and boast that in chapter 7, "which focuses on the state and nation-building efforts of Israelis and Palestinians, there are more than twice as many citations to Israeli or Jewish writers than there are to Palestinian authors."

"Wide variety" - Indeed, the initial letters of the surnames of those B/S cites range from "A," as in Ibrahim and Janet Abu-Lughod, two veteran and distinguished pro-Arab propagandists, through "H," as in Theodor Herzl, who is quoted mainly to show the allegedly imperialist nature of Zionism, "M," as in Benny Morris, a leading Israeli "post-Zionist," revisionist-historian, to "W," as in Chaim Weizmann, who, somewhat like Herzl, is quoted to show Zionism's alleged blindness due to superciliousness.

In between we have "B," as in Lenini Brenner, Mordechai Bar-On, and Meron Benvenisti; "E," as in Norman Finkelstein and Simha Flapan; "H," as in Yehoshafat Harkabi and Leon Hadar; "K," as in Perez Kidron; "M" for Joan Mandell of MERIP (a New Left enthusiastic supporter of Fatah's "Revolution Until Victory" idea); "R," as in Maxime Rodinson; "S," as in Tom Segev and Avi Shlaim.

These are all Israeli or Diaspora Jews who do, indeed, represent variety - a variety of styles and degrees of bashing a Zionism and an Israel guided by my idea or personality to the right of Meretz. For some, even Meretz is too orthodox. To add to the variety, B/S gives us Arabs (Muslim and Christian, and perhaps secular) and other non-Jews, also, with surnames in a fairly wide range of initial letters, though they are rather monochromatic in their hostility to Israel.

They range from "A" for the above-mentioned Abu-Lughod and also Baha Abu-Laban, through "C" for Erskine Childers and Andrew and Leslie Cockburn, through "K" for Rashid Khalidi, to "S" for Edward Said, who considers Yasser Arafat to have sold out to the Zionists, and Rajah Shehadeh.

The variety includes many more non-Jews and Jews, Arabs and others, from Israel and elsewhere - ranging from just plain vicious slanderers to those who claim to be concerned for Israel's soul and out to save us from ourselves. B/S quote them dozens of times, mainly to show Zionism as a Western imperialist-colonialist agent and Israel as an alien, virtually criminal transplant in this region.

On the other hand, B/S does, indeed, also quote David Ben-Gurion, Weizmann, Herzl, Yehuda Leib Pinesker, Moses Hess, Aaron S. Klemm, Elie Kedourie, Walter Laqueur, Barry Rubin, Emmanuel Gutman, Nadav Safran, Itamar Rubinovich, Yitzhak Shamir, Shabtai Tevet, and a few others. They quote a few of these in a relatively neutral way, but most in order to illustrate Zionism's and Israel's alleged nefarious intentions and deeds on behalf of Western imperialism.

Bill and Springborg argue that "there are more than twice as many citations to Israeli or Jewish writers than there are to Palestinian authors." That may be; but most of those citations are of the sort that "Palestinians," too, can and do cite in support of their anti-Zionist, anti-Israeli canards.

The professors say I wrote of the "bloodthirsty declarations of most Arabs." I said no such thing. I did write of "the well-documented bloodthirsty anti-Jewish declarations of most Arab, including 'Palestinian,' spokesmen" of the 1948 period, when the armies of five Arab states invaded newborn Israel.

B/S calls those invasions "military interventions... into the civil war... raging... between Jews and Palestinians..." It quotes an early leading revisionist-historian, Simha Flapan, to the effect that the invasions were "not aimed at destroying the Jewish state [but were] intended to prevent [Jordan's] Hashemite King Abdullah from annexing the Arab part of Palestine..." Furthermore, both Abdullah and the others "were ready to consider an alliance with Israel to further their aspirations."

Some 6,000 Jews and I don't know how many Arabs lost their lives in this alleged anti-Abdullah action.

In out-of-context quotations from Ben-Gurion, taken from Flapan and that other notorious revisionist, Avi Shlaim, B/S purports to show that our acceptance of the 1947 UN partition proposal was not intended at long last to reestablish our national sovereignty under the best conditions available, but was only part of a "tactical move designed to pave the way for a military confrontation with the Palestinians."

Incidentally, in that period there was no people calling itself "Palestinian," certainly no such Arab people. Distinguished Arab spokesmen had only recently said as much to the Anglo-American Committee of Inquiry and to the UN.

What have Bill's and W & M's hospitality and his and Springborg's travels to do with the quality of the book? The book's use here is a merit for those using or recommending it.

I am sorry to read that it is scheduled to "soon appear in its fifth edition."

The love to face each other

SHABBAT SHALOM

By SHLOMO RISKIN

Among the most famous ornaments of the Sanctuary were the two cherubs, which adorned the Holy Cover and protected the Holy Tablets of Testimony.

There were cherubs in the desert sanctuary built by Moses, and there were cherubs in the Holy Temple built by King Solomon 1,000 years later.

However, in the Sanctuary the cherubs are described as facing each other, while in the Holy Temple, they are described as facing the wall of the Temple, inward, away from each other (2 Chronicles 13:3). Rabbi Yohanan, a Talmudic sage, explains: "In one case [our portion of the cherubs facing each other] Israel is doing the will of God, and in the other case [facing the wall of the Temple] Israel is not doing the will of God" [Babylonian Talmud, Bava Batra 99a].

The Rashbam (Rabbeinu Shmuel ben Meir, 1080-1174, grandson of Rashi) explains in his Talmudic interpretation that there was in effect the very same ornamental piece of sculpture in the form of two cherubs in both sacred places, the Sanctuary as well as the Holy Temple.

A miracle, or Divine intervention, was involved in the direction in which the cherubs faced; whenever the Israelites acted in accordance with the Divine Will, the cherubs would face each other and whenever the Israelites did not act in accordance with the Divine Will, the cherubs would face the Temple Wall.

The behavior of the nation Israel literally animated the sculptured cherubs. Unfortunately, it was during the reign of King Solomon that the Israelites began to backslide. The Netziv (Rabbi Naftali Tzvi Yehuda Beirlin, 1817-1893) has difficulty with the notion that the change in direction was determined by the Israelites' behavior; after all, King Solomon is pictured as having produced cherubs for the Temple which were specifically made facing the wall, differing from the cherubs which had been produced by Moses and Bezalel.

Hence the famed Rosh Yeshiva of Volozhin suggests that the Talmudic phrase "when Israel is doing the will of God" refers to the historical period of the desert Sanctuary, and "when Israel is not doing the will of God" refers to the historical period of Solomon's Temple. And this period of era description, insists the Netziv, harks back to the famous Talmudic debate between Rabbi Yishmael and Rabbi Shimon bar Yohai regarding the role of Torah study in our lives.

In Deuteronomy, the following verse appears: "I will give you rain for your land at the right season, the autumn rains and the spring rains, that you may gather in your grain" (Deuteronomy 11:14). The Sages ask why do you need the words, "...so that you may gather in your grain?" Isn't that obvious? Rabbi Yishmael teaches that the verse in question comes to limit the command of God to Joshua: "This book of Torah shall not depart out of your mouth. You shall meditate therein by day and by night" (Joshua 1:8).

Since one could logically conclude that the Almighty is commanding us to devote all our time to Torah and no time at all to a worldly occupation, the seemingly superfluous phrase in Deuteronomy, underscores the importance of a person "gathering his grain."

A person must do both: study Torah and be involved in worldly occupation, concludes Rabbi Yishmael.

Rabbi Shimon bar Yohai disagrees completely. "If a person is to plow in the plowing season, sow in the sowing season, reap in the reaping season, thresh in the threshing season... what is to become of Torah? But the fact is that when Israel does the will of God, the work of Israel will be done by others... and when Israel does not do the will of God, then they will have to break their own backs, as it says, 'so that you gather in your grain.'" [Babylonian Talmud, Berachot 35a].

The Netziv, in an ingenious fashion and very much in accord with Lithuanian yeshiva ideology, links this dispute with the direction of the cherubs. We must remember that the desert generation had their nutritional needs taken care of by the manna, and their shelter needs taken care of by the succot (tabernacles) or Divine tents of glory; they lived a kind of primordial, communal existence, free to devote themselves completely to the study of Torah. They lived a life "doing the will of God," as understood by Rabbi Shimon bar Yohai, and therefore the cherubs of Moses' desert sanctuary faced each other.

The period of the Holy Temple was one in which the Israelites had already entered the land of Israel and were deeply involved in the agricultural pursuits of extracting subsistence - and vital natural resources - from the land. They worked very hard, and even if they remained devoutly committed to God and to Torah, they were nevertheless in the Rabbi Shimon bar Yohai category of "not doing the will of God." Hence, the cherubs of King Solomon's Temple faced the wall.

The Netziv was the great Talmudic figure who headed the yeshiva of Volozhin. For him, the study of Torah was life and life was the study of Torah. It is no wonder that he would interpret "doing the will of God" as exclusive involvement in the study of Torah.

I would like to suggest a third interpretation of the Talmudic explanation of the cherubs' direction. It appears to me that "doing the will of God" refers neither to the general actions of the Israelites nor to the periods of the desert or the Solomonic Kingdom respectively; it refers rather to the specific direction of the cherubs. The cherubs have the face of babies and the wings of birds; they symbolize humanity, the best of humanity, consisting of childlike naivete and angel-like capacity to reach upwards and fly to the Divine. When our most God-like people, interpreters or protectors of Torah (which the cherubs must be), face each other and express sensitivity towards each other, they must be viewed as "doing the will of heaven."

But when they only face the Temple and turn away from each other - even for the best of reasons, even for the sake of the Temple, even for the sake of Heaven - then they are "not doing the will of heaven." Moses understood this, and built a temporary Sanctuary so that "God could dwell in the midst of the people; his cherubs faced each other."

King Solomon did not sufficiently understand, so he built an imposing edifice but laid the groundwork for the disintegration of his nation, his cherubs faced the wall of the Temple, but not each other!

The cherubs have been interpreted in various ways, but one thing is clear: when two people face each other, when we love each other in a way that reflects the love of the Divine Presence for the nation of Israel, only then are we truly fulfilling the "will of God."

Shabbat Shalom

GRAPEVINE

A shining success

By GREER FAY CASHMAN

THE LONG arm of coincidence spans time and continents. When Miriam Frankel, director of development at Reuth, the Women's Social Service Organization dedicated to enabling members of the "Third Age" to live out their lives in dignity, read about the accolades being heaped on Shine, the story of Australian piano prodigy David Helfgott, her mind went back to her youth in Perth. She remembered going to the movies with Helfgott when she was 16, and wondered if he remembered her. He did and he and his wife were delighted to learn that Reuth was having a benefit screening of the film.

Better still, Lynn Redgrave, who plays Helfgott's wife in the movie, is a Reuth supporter, and spoke to Frankel by phone from Los Angeles only minutes before the screening. Helfgott, she said, had been so pleased with the movie that he'd termed it the best thing since Ben Hur. She looked forward to his scheduled concert recital in Los Angeles on March 25. Several Australians in the audience at Jerusalem's Lev Smaadar cinema were slightly peeved that the plot deviated somewhat from the truth. Nonetheless the consensus was that it's a great movie. Even the men got weepy.

Shoul Eisenberg, chairman of the Council for the Promotion of Israel-China Relations, and Dan Propper, president of the Israel Manufacturers Association in honor of Chinese Vice Premier Li Lanqing, Peres earned the appreciative laughter and applause of Li's large entourage of businessmen and journalists when he said, "Great Britain didn't come to Hong Kong to introduce democracy and China doesn't take over Hong Kong to spoil its prosperity."

But then, Peres who also happens to be CPICR honorary president, put his foot in his mouth by mentioning Taiwan. In a thinly disguised message to Middle East peace negotiators Peres said: "Even with Taiwan, China understands that it is better to be one country with two systems, than two countries with one system." The silence was so deadly that one could cut the air with a knife.

But Peres, to his credit, is adept at quick reversals, and earned himself another round of applause when he referred to a remark Li had made earlier. Li had attributed his special affinity for Israel to his school days. If a pupil did exceptionally well, the teacher gave him two triangles "like in the flag of Israel." If he did moderately well, he got one triangle, and if he did badly, he got a cross. Praising Li's address to the assembly of Israeli and Chinese business executives Peres said, "You can get two triangles, not a cross."

THERE WERE hardly any non-Russians at the opening of the protest exhibition at Jerusalem's Artists' House by Moscow-born Vera Gutkina. A placard in one corner proclaimed "Support Russian Olig, not Russian Mafia." In a spoof on Habad's attempts to get Russian Jews onto the religious track, a plaque in a painting reads "Don't steal on Shabbat." Although in Israel for 15 years, the 43-year-old Gutkina is still angry about the ways in which many Soviet expatriates now living here are treated. That anger prompted her to found Sod, a non-profit organization for the protection of immigrants from the former Soviet Union.

Amongst the guests at the opening were Russian Ambassador Alexander Bovin, who had actually come to see a group exhibition, which opened concurrently at the same venue. The importance of cultural expression and pursuits in the lives of Russian immigrants was evidenced not only by the size of the crowd, but also by the number of press photographers representing most of the local Russian print media.

THE CAUSE is noble, but the sales pitch isn't. Rabbis Simcha Haacohen Kook, chief rabbi of Rehovot, Levi Yitzhak Bistritzki, chief rabbi of Safed, Haim Druckman, head of Yeshiva Or Zion, Azriel Oyerbach, renowned Talmudic commentator, and Moshe Yosef Mitzki, head of the Jerusalem Rabbinical Court, are amongst some dozen highly respected rabbis who have joined forces to raise funds to support the family of a

The notice states that a donor giving over NIS 180 will have his name mentioned in prayers at the Western Wall for 40 consecutive days. In addition, every 70 donors contributing NIS 180 will be included in a raffle for a silver havdala set.

Porush is currently celebrating half a century of community work for which he has received tributes from several luminaries from the rabbinic world, including, as of late week, Rabbi Moshe Hager. Given only minimal notice that the rebbe and several of his followers were on their way to his home, Porush acted with alacrity, summoning his sons and sons-in-law to join him in greeting the very special guest. One of his sons, Rabbi Meir Porush, who happens to be deputy minister for construction and housing, had to put affairs of state on hold because his father's honor took precedence.

THE KNESSET has a new spokesman, Giora Porides. No stranger to the role, not to people in high places, Porides was formerly the spokesman for president Chaim Herzog. He was also briefly military adjutant to President Ezer Weizman and later Channel 2 ombudsman.

THE WEEK THAT WAS

Bibi deprived of his day in the sun

By MICHAL YUDELMAN

By all accounts, Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu had a successful trip to Washington. But - oh, cruel fate! - he was deprived of even a brief round of media applause as other dramatic developments stumbled hard upon one another's heels.

Even on the day before his return, the media had cut short their plaudits by swiping their spotlights onto the Shabal-Terner affair.

In these days of salacious tabloid journalism, what could be juicier than a Lolita tale of a police inspector-general and a student?

When Netanyahu arrived on Monday, the headlines already had forgotten his conquest of Washington and were harping instead on his upcoming testimony to police investigating the Bar-On affair.

Well, fair enough - it isn't every day a prime minister is questioned by police.

But since there was no suggestion Netanyahu was involved in the Bar-On shenanigans, the master of public relations had expected to give a good show and turn the questioning to his television-time advantage.

Alas, again, it was not to be so. The police finished their questioning of the first citizen late at night. By dawn the next day yet another new affair had burst upon the scene to capture the fickle attention of the media fireflies.

This time it was the dramatic resignation of Dan Avi-Yitzhak, the defense attorney of Aryeh Deri.

The bombshell hogged the air time, overshadowing even the looming Har Homa controversy, with its threats of Palestinian anger and a renewed coalition crisis.

Not only did Avi-Yitzhak resign, but he hurled some well-aimed parting darts at Deri. He accused the Shas leader of slandering himself and his wife, and of telling "awful and fibulous tales" to the police during his interrogation on the Deri/Bar-On affair.

The reason Deri told the police these terrible fibs, said Avi-Yitzhak in his resignation letter, was "my great sin in objecting to your plan to appoint Roni Bar-On as Attorney-General."

Ahal! This was why the media pounced. This was the first public confirmation that Deri had planned or acted in some way on the proposed appointment of Bar-On. This was something all parties questioned had so far denied - at least in earshot of the public.

However, Deri quickly pointed out that Avi-Yitzhak's charge did not link him to a deal on the Hebron agreement, nor to a plea bargain with Bar-On in Deri's criminal trial.

This was the essence of Channel 1's story that blew the affair open.

In any case, Deri summed up these new revelations as "all lies."

So far police have questioned 22 people, including the prime minister, two ministers, four MKs, seven lawyers and three Israel Broadcasting Authority people.

Who is telling the truth? Who is lying? What is the truth? Will we ever know?

As all too often in this country's public affairs, we are left with more questions and few answers, as we wait for the next crisis to blow the story away.

But, as a senior police source put it, "the stink coming from the scandal is now greater than ever."

TRAP DOOR

"What's he up to now?" wondered Labor Party people when Netanyahu invited the opposition leaders to a briefing on cabinet plans for Jerusalem's Har Homa area.

The answer was straightforward. Threatened from his right by coalition partners who said they would quit unless he starts building in Har Homa, and faced with a Security Services warning of a new disaster, Netanyahu needed Labor's backing.

"Don't fall into the trap Netanyahu is setting for you." Meretz leader Yossi Sarid cautioned Labor chairman Shimon Peres.

He said Labor should not support the cabinet's plan to build in the controversial spot.

"When the catastrophe comes, and come it will, they will have Labor and Peres to blame for it," said Sarid, "because Peres is always to blame."

Labor MKs guessed that by inviting them, Netanyahu was again signaling to extreme right-wingers threatening the coalition, that in the final analysis he really doesn't need them, because Labor and a national unity government are a consistent option.

At the briefing session, Uzi Baram could not resist an "I told you so."

"A year ago you built your election campaign on the slogan 'Peres will divide Jerusalem.' We knew then it was a lie," he told Netanyahu.

"Have you realized yet that it was a lie when today when you call us to back your plans to build in Jerusalem?"

Uzi Baram: Likud accused us of dividing Jerusalem last year and now they call on us to back plans for building in the capital. (Pamim)

When the Laborites trooped out again, they said the prime minister decided nothing about Har Homa, so they felt no need to take a stand on the matter.

This was just as well, because had they been required to take a stand, the Laborites would have run into some cracks in their own party.

A day earlier, MKs Ehud Barak and Binyamin Ben-Eliezer had urged building in Har Homa without delay.

Yossi Beilin, Baram and others, while not disputing Israel's right to build there, thought the timing decidedly off.

Why sabotage the peace process and increase the danger of riots and violence when sovereignty over Jerusalem is not even at issue, they asked.

WISDOM OF THE SAGES

The Ivory commission is still investigating the causes for the helicopter disaster near the Lebanese border which killed 73 soldiers.

In his wisdom, Shas spiritual leader Rabbi Ovadia Yosef already knows the answer.

During a condolence visit, Yosef told a bereaved family that the helicopter victims are "reincarnated souls who have finished atoning for their sins in a previous life."

Some years ago, when several dozen schoolchildren were killed in a tragic bus accident at Habonim intersection, the then interior minister, Yitzhak Peretz, also of Shas, said they died because the mezuzot in their homes were faulty.

Sarid branded Yosef's statement "disgusting and outrageous" and called for him to be censured for trampling on the feelings of bereaved families in this way.

"If the deceased soldiers indeed were reincarnated souls who had finished atoning for their sins, then Yosef is a bad soul which hasn't even begun atoning for his sins yet," snapped Sarid.

The Association for the Freedom of Science, Religion and Culture reminded Yosef that reincarnations, incantations and election amulets are all alien to the spirit of Judaism and have no place in Israeli society.

NOTWITHSTANDING rumors to the contrary, Candice Bergen will retain her Murphy Brown persona. The star of the popular television series this week signed a contract for yet another season - her 10th.

WHAT DO you give a keen basketball fan for his 42nd birthday? Kevin Costner got a dream present of a one-on-one contest with Magic Johnson.

No need to ask who won. But Johnson was in a generous mood and allowed Costner to score a few points.

Grapevine also appears every Wednesday.

A DAY LIKE NO OTHER
Israel is not associated with heavy industry, and yet... This tour will visit the Haifa Bay, including the Oil Refineries, the Kili Aluminium Works, the shipyards, workshops and navy base, plus a boat tour of the bay. We bet you've never seen this part of Israel. NIS 190 (including lunch)
Tour guide: Dr. Yoash Zohar

Monday March 17

LAND OF MILK AND HONEY
Cheese, honey, olive oil and wine - we'll taste them all on our way. We'll start at the organic dairy of Kili, and continue on to the olive oil press at the Druze village of Yamah, then the prize-winning Dalton winery. We'll also visit the bee hives of Shadmoit Dvora and its silk production unit. The Galilee is especially beautiful at this time of the year. Join us! NIS 215 (including lunch)

IN THE FOOTSTEPS OF THE SANHEDRIN
The Bar-Kochba Revolt failed. 600,000 Jews died. Jerusalem was destroyed. Jews were sold as slaves, and Tora study came to an end. But a new center arose in the Galilee, and the towns of Zippori and Tiberias became famous. We'll visit them, as well as Beit Shearim, the burial place of Rabbi Yehuda Hanasi and his family. NIS 215 (including lunch)

The tour price includes transportation from Jerusalem or Tel Aviv and return, entrance to all sites, background lectures and on-the-spot explanations. Lunch as indicated, 10% off when you book all five tours. Pick-up and drop-off along the route when possible and arranged beforehand.

Real Vision has developed a prototype of a 3D image generator. The product has civilian and military applications including training and simulation, 3D internet services and navigation.

Germany plans financial reform

BONN (Reuters) - Germany yesterday honed proposals for sweeping reforms aimed at boosting its status as a world financial center ahead of increased competition expected to accompany European monetary union.
The proposals, planned for implementation in 1998, are designed to tighten safeguards for investors, ease access to capital markets for smaller companies, and permit the use of a significantly wider range of financial products.
"Operating conditions on the German financial center are to be adapted to the challenges of the future to secure and improve Germany's international competitive position," the ministry said in a statement.

The reforms will cover the stock market, the investment industry, and laws on venture capital firms - areas in urgent need of change, given Germany's reputation for lax investor protection and excessive restrictions on market activity.
The impetus for reform has come in large part from the German financial industry itself, which fears that the disappearance of the mark under a single European currency will rob Germany of its key draw as an international center.
The ministry aims to make it easier for foreign firms to list in Germany, modify listing restrictions for new companies and extend the powers of the country's two-year-old markets watchdog in supervising prospectuses for share issues.

Companies may also be allowed to delist on demand from a regional bourse, a move which would probably lead to even stronger concentration of German listings in Frankfurt.
Bonn also wants to legalize a broader range of investment products to help woo risk-averse Germans into the equity market, such as by giving funds leeway to invest in swaps and options and allowing mixed property and equity funds.

Finally, the current restrictive conditions for venture capital firms are to be liberalized, for example by allowing such firms to take the form of a limited liability company and by giving them more flexibility on refinancing measures.
The first discussion paper on the reforms will be ready to go before parliament next month.
Final legislation will be passed in the form of the Third Financial Markets Promotion Law, which also covers issues such as creating a level playing field for other EU banks and securities houses in line with EU norms.

2 arrests in Migdal embezzlement case

By GALIT LIPKIS BECK

Jerusalem police are expected to question additional people in connection with alleged financial irregularities at the Migdal branch of the Migdal insurance company, a source close to the investigation said yesterday.
The head of collection at the branch, Yehiel Mandelbaum, is being questioned over irregularities in his department resulting in a shortfall of as much as NIS 2 million.
The shortfall was discovered two weeks ago during a routine internal audit of the branch. In reaction to the findings, Migdal hired a private investigation firm, which found that hundreds of thousands of shekels - apparently money skimmed off premium deposits - were missing from the branch. Department head Mandelbaum, 38, joined the company four years ago.
Four days ago, Mandelbaum was summoned to Migdal's head office in Tel Aviv to explain the missing money, but failed to show up. He also failed to arrive at work in the Jerusalem branch and was missing from home, and on Wednesday the company notified the police. Yesterday, according to the Ma'ariv daily, Mandelbaum showed up in his home in Jerusalem and was arrested shortly afterwards.

Mandelbaum reportedly told the police he was being blackmailed by Binyamin Retzikovsky, 48, manager of the Shir-Dan insurance agency, which works with Migdal, according to Ma'ariv. Retzikovsky denied the allegation, saying Mandelbaum chose to pay him an undisclosed sum of money "out of his own free will."
Retzikovsky, also held for questioning, reportedly told police the money Mandelbaum paid him was a bribe so that he would not reveal his knowledge of Mandelbaum's embezzlement. Retzikovsky said he had spent all of the money.

Migdal said it has insurance coverage for events of this kind. "From the moment we transferred the case to the police it is out of our hands," a company spokesman said. "We are currently waiting for the police to reach their conclusions."
Bank Leumi recently sold control of Migdal, one of the country's biggest insurance companies, to leading Italian insurer Generali, in accordance with the newly revised restrictions of the Banking Law on the banks' ownership of non-financial holdings.
The insurance firm completed the first nine months of 1996 with a net profit of NIS 81 million, compared with NIS 75m. in the corresponding period last year. The Migdal group consists of five insurance companies: Migdal, Hamagen, Shimshon, Maoz, and Sela. The group also owns insurance agencies and financial companies.
Mandelbaum's father, Moshe, was Bank of Israel governor in the early 1980s.

Meridor: Cancel anti-strike decrees

By Jerusalem Post Staff

The cabinet is expected to rescind its weekly meeting today the emergency decrees it issued in December, when it sought to stem what seemed to be a rising tide of labor unrest.
Finance Minister Dan Meridor

yesterday said he intends to ask the cabinet to approve his proposal to lift the decrees, since their original pretext - concern for the supply and provision of basic goods and services to the public - is no longer valid.
Meridor said in a statement he wishes to remind the public that the decrees were passed against a backdrop of a Histadrut-led general strike, which aimed to bring to a standstill basic functions across the economy.

The law allows the government to meet the needs of such a situation by imposing emergency decrees, under which strikers must return to their jobs. Such decrees expire within three months of their imposition, unless annulled prior to that.
However, should the need for such measures reappear following renewed labor unrest, the government would consider reimposing the emergency decrees, the Treasury statement said.

Buying a home in Israel?

Only one bank gives you Morefor™ your money

Lots of banks offer mortgage products for overseas residents who are buying homes in Israel. But only the Bank of Jerusalem offers Morefor mortgages for foreign residents. The mortgage is not just a product, it's a service.

You see, at the Bank of Jerusalem mortgages are our core business. This means we understand what home buyers go through and are especially sensitive to the needs of those who are less familiar with the way things are done in Israel.

What's more, each and every Morefor mortgage is custom-designed around the needs of the individual client. Because there are few things quite as personal as your home.

- Morefor mortgages are available to any non-Israeli resident or exemption holder and require no guarantors.
- Morefor mortgages start at $75,000 and are available for up to half your property's value.
- Morefor mortgages offer schedules of up to ten years, and payments may be made either quarterly or semi-annually with no pre-payment penalties.
- Most importantly Morefor mortgages come with highly personalized service, absolute discretion, and unsurpassed expertise in the Israeli mortgage market. Which is why your first stop should be the Bank of Jerusalem, where we always give you Morefor your money.

The Royal Wings fly in Jordanian King Hussein's personal pilot, Captain Taghrid Akasbeh, meets with Airports Authority officials this week. Akasbeh, who is also the vice-president for flight operations of Royal Jordanian Airlines, came here to discuss technical arrangements for Royal Wings, the Royal Jordanian subsidiary flying to Israel. She met with Avi Kastelitz, chairman of the Airports Authority board, Ya'acov Dayan, deputy director-general for finance, and Yehiel Amital, director of international relations. She was accompanied by Shawiki Abu Ghazaleh, Royal Jordanian's Israel area manager. (Text: Haim Shapiro; Photo: Shani Rahamim)

Kahalani: I'm straight as an arrow

Internal Security Minister Avigdor Kahalani yesterday denied reports he had wretapped rival Ronni Milo during the 1993 Tel Aviv mayoral campaign. "It never happened," Kahalani told reporters at a National Traffic Police conference in Bat Yam. "I'm as straight as an arrow, and that's how I've always been. Last night I slept like a baby. I observe the law and serve as an example in this respect." Kahalani also denied that any formal probe of the alleged incident was taking place. "There is no investigation," he said. "Somebody said something, the police checked it out, and that's how it ended, that's all. I never wretapped anybody; I'm an honest man, a decent man. I obey the law and anybody who wants to can inspect me 360 degrees all around and won't find anything." Asked whether he would be able to continue to function as minister if an investigation takes place, Kahalani replied: "There is an attorney-general. I'm the same as any other citizen in the State of Israel. I've got no problem. "I'm not stuck to my seat, and I won't be stuck to my seat, and I hereby announce there is nothing. Somebody is trying to revive something that died a long time ago. There was once a police investigation; they questioned me and it was all over. They announced unequivocally that there was nothing to it. There was nothing. The best investigators in the State of Israel checked it out." (Iim)

Eitan slams Ben-Yair

Former attorney-general Michael Ben-Yair is a "fool," who pursued indictments on only one side of the political map to scuttle certain political careers and protect others, Agriculture and Environment Minister Rafael Eitan said yesterday. Eitan was acquitted on Wednesday of charges he had violated the Privacy Protection Law when he accepted information culled from an IDF database and allegedly used it to force an activist out of the party. At a press conference yesterday, Eitan called for a reevaluation of the powers given to the attorney-general. Ben-Yair said Eitan's remarks were not worthy of a response. (Iim)

NEWS in brief

- Youth charged in rape of little girl
A 15-year-old Lod youth was charged yesterday in Tel Aviv District Court with raping a seven-year-old Ramlie gid and abusing her 10-year-old brother and his friend, age eight. According to the indictment, the accused threw burning matches at the children, filled the brother's mouth with mud, tied him up and jumped on the girl's stomach. In a separate indictment, the youth was also charged with sodomizing a different 10-year-old boy, and stabbing a 15-year-old with a pocket knife. (Iim)
- Galilee slaying suspect's remand extended
David Kaye, 60, of Kibbutz Sde Nehemia in Upper Galilee, who police believe was responsible for the slaying of kibbutz member and Upper Galilee Local Council head Gadli Metzger on December 22, had his remand extended by nine days yesterday. (Iim)
- Local AIPAC director leaving
Leonard Davis is leaving the American-Israel Public Affairs Committee (AIPAC) on March 1st, after 25 years of service, first in Washington as information director, and the last 14 as director of the organization's Israel office. Wendy Singer, who has been with AIPAC for seven years, first as a lobbyist in Washington and currently as deputy director in Israel, has been named acting director in Davis's stead. (David Makovsky)

Palestinian Authority - will eventually intrude on the capital. "Wherever there is territorial continuity," said Yisrael Ba'alya MK Yehi Stem, who visited the site with the Land of Israel Front, "a border will not run" - the exact reason why the Front is so keen on seeing development begin, and the exact reason why the Palestinian leadership are so keen in putting it off. "Facts are being established on the ground," Stems said. "What we don't do today because we are afraid, will be that much more difficult to do tomorrow, when the Palestinians have control of even more territory." Stems said that the Palestinians are doing everything they can to create areas of territorial continuity in the territories, and that Israel should do the same in Greater Jerusalem. Not only will Har Homa link the city's southernmost areas to other Jewish neighborhoods in the capital, but it will prevent the Palestinian villages in the autonomous area from being able to link up with east Jerusalem villages. According to Stems, a decision to build would not contravene the Oslo accords, since nowhere in the accords does it say Israel cannot build in its capital. Hussein said, on the other hand, the Oslo accord does prohibit unilateral acts that could prejudice final-status talks on Jerusalem. It is indeed the unilateral nature of the decision to build which is so infuriating to the Palestinians, and to opponents of the neighborhood. They say that the status of Jerusalem will be negotiated, and the fact that the status of Jerusalem will be negotiated means that Israel can no longer do as it wishes in the city. "As long as we have decided that Jerusalem's final status will be determined together," said Peace Now political secretary Mossy Raz, "we cannot just make decisions alone. We have to decide these issues together." But to the Right, words like these mean that Israel has already given up sovereignty over an undivided Jerusalem, even before

KEEPING THE MOMENTUM - England's Alec Stewart plays off his pads in his 81 against New Zealand.

England cruises to limited-overs victory

CHRISTCHURCH (Reuters) - A classy, controlled partnership of 170 between Alec Stewart and Graham Thorpe carried England to a four-wicket win over New Zealand in yesterday's opening one-day international.

England left-arm spinner and man-of-the-match Phil Tufnell had earlier bounced back from an off-field controversy to go the damage to New Zealand, claiming four for 22 from 10 overs, his best one-day international figures.

Earlier this week, England manager John Barclay rejected allegations by staff at a Christchurch restaurant that Tufnell and two companions had smoked cannabis in a toilet there.

Chasing New Zealand's inadequate 222 for six, England had a brief hiccup when it lost two wickets at 28, before Stewart and Thorpe took charge, adding 170 in 156 minutes off 207 balls and often toying with the New Zealand bowlers.

England had a late scare when three wickets fell in 19 balls for the addition of nine runs, but got through to 226 for six, with seven balls to spare.

Nasser Hussain was substituted on 11, while Robert Croft, eased a tricky late situation for England by thumping his first two balls through the offside to the fence to secure the victory.

Having won the second and third tests of their series, England carried on from where it left off on Tuesday and had New Zealand's measure from early in the day.

New Zealand's batting struggled after a bright start while the bowling lacked discipline and penetration.

After England captain Mike Atherton got his team off to a snappy start with three early boundaries, New Zealand struck back with two wickets in three balls.

Atherton played inside a straight ball from off-spinner Dipak Patel and was bowled for 19, then fellow opener Nick Knight edged Simon Doull to wicketkeeper Lee Germon.

But Stewart and Thorpe settled quickly into their work.

The England 50 arrived in the 12th over and Stewart took boundaries in consecutive deliveries from Nathan Astle before clubbing the first ball from medium-pace Chris Cairns into the stand at long on.

Stewart took England to 100 with two fours in three balls from Cairns at the halfway stage, the score was 14 runs and one wicket better off than New Zealand at 117 for two.

England needed 30 in the last 10 overs, but both batsmen were then out in the eighties, in quick succession, to fast bowler Heath Davis.

Garvin Larsen and Davis restricted England near the end, 14 runs being needed off the last five overs, and six off the last two when Davis had Dominic Cork caught at mid-wicket off a full toss.

Croft then ended New Zealand's hopes of an improbable victory with two fours in succession.

Maccabi reaches Final 16

By BRIAN FREEMAN

Maccabi Tel Aviv advanced to the European Final 16 in dramatic fashion, securing a 82-78 victory over Olympiakos only in the closing seconds before a packed house at Yad Eilat last night.

The win pushed Maccabi's record in the final pool to 9-7 and sent it into the next round to face Efes Pilsen in the best-of-three series starting on March 6.

Randy White, injured earlier in the week during practice, came up with the game of the season, scoring 24 points on 10-14 shooting. He also pulled down six rebounds and had five steals to give Maccabi a needed presence at both ends of the court against the four-time defending Greek champions.

Maccabi broke a 78-78 tie with only 14 seconds remaining when Derrick Sharp scored his first points of the half on an open jumper. Olympiakos then raced down the court, but Georgias Sigalas' shot was partially blocked and Brad Leaf was fouled collecting the rebound with 4.4 seconds left on the clock.

Leaf, 32-32 from the free-throw line in European play to that point, then coolly stepped up to the line to sink his two shots, seal the victory and save the season for the blue-and-yellow.

The tension in the stadium was at fever pitch all night, as Maccabi managed to keep himself in the game for the next 13 minutes, scoring nine key points in the process.

Buck Johnson led Maccabi in the first half, scoring 16 of his 22 points, mostly on strong moves in the paint. This inside presence was all the more important for Maccabi, which was out-rebounded all night by the taller and strong Greeks.

Doron Sheffer, who was also in foul trouble, turned in a steady performance with nine points and seven rebounds.

And Leaf, who has been sorely missed recently in European play due to an injury, made his usually key contributions.

Maccabi had fallen behind 44-39 with only 46 seconds remaining in the first half when Leaf got himself to the foul line for five shots, making all of them to knot up the score at the break. The last three came after he had gathered a rebound, raced down the court, and was fouled throwing up a shot from well behind the three-point line as time ran out.

Maccabi finished fourth in Group E after Alba Berlin defeated Stefanel Milan 91-80. This meant that Alba finished second with a 10-6 mark, while Olympiakos edged out Maccabi (both 9-7) for the third spot thanks to the Greeks' nine-point victory last month over Maccabi.

Maccabi faces a tough series against Efes Pilsen, which finished first in its group with a 12-4 record and has the support of its fanatical Turkish fans for the first and, if needed, last game.

For Olympiakos, Rivers scored 19, Sigalas 17, Tarlach 14, and Evric Gray 12.

For Maccabi, White had 24, Johnson 22, Henefeld and Sheffer 9, Leaf 7, Sharp 6, Borko Radulovic 3 and Oded Katash 2, sinking his only points of the night on free throws following the technical.

The other final 16 matchups from Group E will pit Olympiakos against Partizan Belgrade and Stefanel Milan against Kinard Bologna, which edged into the next round with a 73-57 home victory over Split last night.

The other teams advancing to the Final 16 are Teamsystem Bologna, Cibona Zagreb, Estudiantes Madrid, Limoges, Panathinaikos, Villeurbanne, Olympia Ljubljana and San Fernando (from Spain).

Raptors set team three-point mark

SAN ANTONIO (Reuters) - Damon Stoudamire scored 21 points to lead six players in double figures and the Toronto Raptors established a team record for three-pointers in a 125-92 rout of the hapless San Antonio Spurs Wednesday.

The Raptors never trailed, posted a season high in points while knocking down 15 three-pointers.

Toronto snapped a five-game losing string with just their fourth road win in 24 away games this season.

"I was nervous about the game but we were determined to get a win on this road trip," said Raptors coach Darrell Walker. "Our club played really hard tonight. We got some easy shots and made some big threes."

Walt Williams scored 19 points and Carlos Rogers added 18 and nine rebounds for the Raptors, who shot 55 percent (49-of-89) from the field and 60% (15-of-25) from three-point range, while out-rebounding the Spurs 35-35.

"I have no sympathy for them," Williams said. "Last year, when I was with Sacramento, they kicked our butts all over the place."

Dominique Wilkins and Carl Herrera scored 17 points apiece for San Antonio, losers of five in a row.

The injury-riddled Spurs, who have been without star center David Robinson for most of the season, have 39 losses in 51 games after losing just 43 games in the previous two seasons combined.

Magic 95, Blazers 84
 Penny Hardaway scored 21 points and Horace Grant added 20 and 10 rebounds as the host Magic made a winner out of new coach Richie Adubato.

Adubato was making his debut as Orlando head coach after Brian Hill was fired Tuesday.

Orlando center Rony Seikaly was ejected with 5:24 remaining after receiving two technicals for arguing with officials. But the Magic, who led 82-79 after Isaiah Rider made both free throws for Portland, went on an 8-0 run to put the game away.

Senna manslaughter trial opens

IMOLA, Italy (Reuters) - Frederico Bendinelli, managing director of the Imola track, was the only defendant present on the opening day yesterday at the trial of six men charged with manslaughter over the death of Ayrton Senna.

Formula One team chief Frank Williams and five others have been accused of manslaughter after Brazilian three times world champion Senna died at the San Marino Grand Prix on May 1, 1994.

The defendants, who include Patrick Head, technical director of the Williams team and designer Adrian Newey, deny responsibility for the fatal crash.

Bendinelli said the circuit was not responsible for Senna's death. "I am completely calm and convinced that no responsibility will be laid at the circuit's door," he said.

After yesterday's session, the trial is due to be adjourned until February 28.

Each one of these people will have to be interviewed.

The one complaint to come forward in public was Martin Kruse, 34, who says the abuse started when he was 13 in 1975 and continued until 1982.

It is the second major sex-abuse case this year to tarnish the image of Canada's national sport.

In January, a highly respected junior league coach, Graham James, was sentenced to three-and-a-half years in prison for repeated sexual abuse of two of his players over a period of years.

One of his victims was Sheldon Kennedy, now a forward with the Boston Bruins, who went public with his story of being abused more than 300 times by James.

Kruse first made his allegations in 1992 when he sued Maple Leaf Gardens. He settled out of court for about $45,000, with the stipulation he not go public, but decided this month to come forward anyway.

Cliff Fletcher, president of the Gardens management company and general manager of the Maple Leafs, said police weren't notified in 1993 because an investigation by a private detective was inconclusive.

NHL rocked by another sex-abuse scandal

TORONTO (AP) - Another sex-abuse scandal is jolting the ice hockey world in Canada, involving allegations that staff at Maple Leaf Gardens, one of the sport's hallowed sites, hired boys into sex with offers of free tickets and player autographs.

One alleged victim says he was part of a sex ring from 1975 to 1982 in which group sex took place in the back rooms of the building, sometimes during Toronto Maple Leafs games.

A former maintenance worker at the arena, Gordon Stuckless, appeared in court Wednesday on charges of indecent assault and gross indecency and was ordered held pending a bail hearing next week. At least two other arena employees, one of them deceased, also allegedly were involved.

Stuckless, 47, worked at the Gardens until the early 1990s as a backstage helper at concerts and hockey games.

Toronto police reported fielding dozens of calls from men who said they too were victims of sex abuse at the arena in the 1970s and 1980s.

"The phone's been ringing off the wall," said Detective Dave Tredrea. "It's been dozens and dozens, inter-ally. Each one of these people will have to be interviewed."

The one complaint to come forward in public was Martin Kruse, 34, who says the abuse started when he was 13 in 1975 and continued until 1982.

Toto mania grips country

Punters from all walks of life will be eagerly awaiting the final results of all 15 games on the Sportoto form as a record minimum jackpot of NIS 21 million awaits a lucky person (or people).

At first glance, it appears as if the prediction of all the results will be no easier than last week, when some surprising results caused this week's prize to be the largest ever. This has not deterred punters, however, as well over 30 million lines are expected by Sportoto, this compared to an average week when some six million lines are entered.

Toto stations were overflowing from yesterday morning and by last night it became a torrent as punters spent the evening trying to fill in their forms.

The highlighted game of the weekend is the Petah Tikva derby between host Maccabi and second-placed Hapoel, and as it is the last game of the weekend's program, many punts will be bitten away and many a pack of cigarettes will go up in smoke as the lucky few, who will have managed to correctly forecast the earlier games, will hope for this one to go their way as well.

This weekend's National League action has a lot of open games. Leaders Betar Jerusalem, which lost for the first time in the current campaign last weekend when they fell 1-0 at home to Hapoel Beersheba, travel to Maccabi Herzliya, where they will be out to reassert their challenge for the championship.

The Petah Tikva derby looks like an open affair too, and Hapoel, which failed to capitalize on Betar's loss last week when the team also fell 2-1 at home to lowly Hapoel Beit She'an, will be up against it, needing to overcome the stiff challenge of Maccabi which will not want to lose two derbies in one season after going down by the lone goal last September.

Hapoel Beersheba hosts Toto Cup finalists Bnei Yehuda, and here, again, anything is possible. The Negev side will almost certainly remain in third position regardless of its and other results this weekend, but the team will be buoyed by its confident performance at Teddy Stadium last Saturday.

Bnei Yehuda will also feel it has something to prove following the Toto Cup semifinal win over Maccabi Tel Aviv in midweek, even if its chances of winning the league are all but non-existent.

Other unpredictable matches in the upper division appear to be in Rishon where Ironi hosts Hapoel Kfar Sava, at Teddy Stadium where Hapoel Jerusalem plays Hapoel Tel Aviv and at Beit She'an which will welcome another visit by faltering Maccabi Haifa.

More predictable appear to be the games between Maccabi Tel Aviv and Zefirion Holon and Hapoel Haifa, who are at home to listless Hapoel Taiba.

This weekend's National League fixtures (all matches tomorrow unless stated):

Maccabi Tel Aviv v. Zefirion Holon, National Stadium Hamat Gan 18:00; Maccabi Herzliya v. Betar Jerusalem, Herzliya 18:00; Hapoel Beersheba v. Bnei Yehuda, Beersheba 18:00; Hapoel Haifa v. Hapoel Taiba, Kfar Elyezer 18:30; Maccabi Petah Tikva v. Hapoel Petah Tikva, Petah Tikva 17:45; Hapoel Beit She'an v. Maccabi Haifa, Beit She'an, today 14:30; Ironi Rishon LeZion v. Hapoel Kfar Sava, Fishon 15:00; Hapoel Jerusalem v. Hapoel Tel Aviv, Teddy Stadium 15:00.

Ein Gedi Race sets off tomorrow

The 15th Ein Gedi Race, the lowest race on earth, in memory of Giora and Tomer Ron, will set off tomorrow morning, regardless of the weather.

This year's race combines sport and politics as runners from last week's Luxor Marathon in Egypt will be competing. Following contacts between the organizers of both races, a timetable was drawn up offering runners the opportunity to enter both events.

One hundred runners from Germany will be the first group to participate in the double running festival.

Among the 1,000 runners at the starting line will also be runners from Morocco, Kenya, Spain and the United States.

Some of the prominent names are Boiya Bernard Renlon from Kenya with his best time of 1:01.26 in the half-marathon, Jose Maria Fernandez Atienza from Spain (1:02.23) and Paric Ndayensga, second in the Tel Aviv Marathon whose best time is 1:02.33. Hungarian Helena Barocsi, who won the women's race last year, has also entered.

Local names include Assaf Bimro, Ayalah Setine, Amit Nekman, Dov Kremer and among the women Idit Ganot Keren-Zvi and Ella Krinms.

Besides the half-marathon which starts at 10:15 am, there will also be a 10km run at 10:00 and a 2km race for children at 10:30.

The men's and women's winners will each receive NIS 3,000 with NIS 2,000 for a second place finish and NIS 1,000 for third place. A record-breaking time of less than 1:04.15 for the men and 1:14.41 for the women will result in a bonus of NIS 1,500.

Late entries will be accepted until 4 pm today at (07) 6594422.

Wright in trouble again

LONDON (AP) - Arsenal striker Ian Wright just can't seem to stay out of trouble.

Wright, who has one of the worst disciplinary records in English soccer, faces a possible long suspension for his latest run-in with Manchester United goalkeeper Peter Schmeichel.

Wright made a reckless two-footed lunge at the Danish keeper as they both raced for the ball near the edge of the penalty area in the 76th minute of United's 2-1 victory at Highbury on Wednesday night.

Wright, who had already picked up a yellow card, was lucky not to have been sent off. Neither the referee nor the linesman had a clear view of the incident.

Schmeichel lay writhing on the ground after the challenge. He finished the game limping, and the club said he suffered a badly swollen ankle that could keep him out of tomorrow's crucial league game against Chelsea.

After the final whistle, Schmeichel pointed and shouted at Wright as the players headed into the tunnel. The Arsenal striker had to be restrained as he went after Schmeichel, with police officers and stewards stepping between the two.

The bad blood between the two players dates back to November when Wright accused the Dane of using racist abuse during Arsenal's loss at Old Trafford.

Police informed referee Martin Bodenham of the post-game confrontation and he confirmed he would include it in his match report to the Football Association.

The FA could decide to charge Wright with misconduct or bring the game into dispute.

Wright, who leads the Premier League with 24 goals, has already served a three-match ban this season after a sending-off.

Wednesday's yellow card took him past 21 disciplinary points for another two-match suspension.

Motevassel last Israeli left in tennis satellite

Top seed Oren Motevassel is the last Israeli player in today's semi-finals of the Club Hotel Eilat satellite in Ashkelon.

Motevassel will play sixth seed Dmitri Tomashevich from Uzbekistan.

Yesterday Motevassel beat Jim Thomas from the United States 7-5, 6-4 and Tomashevich defeated Amir Hadad who had disposed of Noam Behr in a surprising second-round match. Tomashevich won 7-6(7/4), 6-1 against Hadad.

The other semifinal will be a contest between unseeded players Julien Varlet from France and Claude N'Goran. Varlet, a qualifier in the competition who beat last week's winner Andrew Ilie in the second round, yesterday knocked out fourth seed Argentinian Andres Zingman 4-6, 7-6(7/1), 6-3.

N'Goran, who was responsible for second seed Nir Welgreen's exit, yesterday beat Yoni Erlich 6-4, 7-5.

Today's matches begin at 10:30 am with the final tomorrow at the same time.

Polish gov't OKs restitution of Jewish communal property

By BAT SHEVA TSUR and news agencies

Poland's parliament yesterday approved a bill on state relations with Jewish communities which will allow its nine tiny surviving communities to recover some property lost during and after the Holocaust.

will provide a legal framework for the surviving congregations, numbering 3,000 to 5,000 Jews, to reclaim some property.

The government estimates that there are some 1,100 cemeteries, 350 synagogues, 28 funeral homes, 27 schools, as well as hospitals and other sites that once belonged to Jewish groups.

Wildstein ridiculed talk that the property Jewish bodies could potentially reclaim represented huge fortunes. "These are half-destroyed remnants of synagogue walls, these are 1,064 cemeteries, knocked down, wrecked, profaned. Even if we just tried to put walls up around these cemeteries...the money would not pay for one half," he said.

communities the possession of properties that belonged to them before 1939," said Naphthali Lavie, vice-chairman of the Israel-based World Jewish Restitution Organization (WJRO).

ernment had, over the years, passed 32 laws and regulations regarding Jewish properties, all of which served to "legitimize" the holding of the properties, which had been handed over to them as "alien" assets after the war.

Tenenbaum suspended by Pentagon

News agencies

The Pentagon said yesterday it had put a tank engineer in Michigan on administrative leave and revoked his work permit, while the FBI investigates whether he divulged US military secrets to Israel over the past 10 years.

Army Lt. Col. Nancy Burt, a Defense Department spokesman, stressed that David Tenenbaum, a 39-year-old civilian, had not been arrested and that no charges had been filed in the case.

"He has been placed on paid administrative leave. His employee badge and his parking permit have been revoked pending the outcome of the investigation," she said.

The FBI disclosed on Wednesday that federal agents had seized computers, financial records, and other documents from the metropolitan Detroit home of Tenenbaum, a mechanical engineer for the US Army Tank, Automotive, and Armaments Command in Warren, Michigan.

In an affidavit filed in US District Court in Detroit, FBI Special Agent Sean Nicol said there may be reason to believe that Tenenbaum violated federal laws on espionage, counterintelligence, and computer crimes.

The FBI said in the affidavit that Tenenbaum admitted to divulging non-releasable classified information to every Israeli liaison officer assigned to TACOM over the last 10 years.

David Bar-Ilan, senior adviser to Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, yesterday denied there was any "improper contact" with Tenenbaum.

"There has been no improper contact between Tenenbaum and anybody or [any] institute associated with the State of Israel," Bar-Ilan said.

The information Tenenbaum allegedly disclosed included Patriot missile countermeasures data, ceramic armor data, armor test and survivability data, and unreleasable classified information on the Bradley Fighting Vehicle and the Humvee transport vehicle, according to the affidavit.

The FBI said Tenenbaum admitted that he "inadvertently" gave information to the Israeli officers and to Reuven Granot, Scientific Deputy Director of the Ministry of Defense.

The ministry said Wednesday its personnel are under orders not to accept any secret US information.

New branch of McDonalds targets Arabs

By DAVID RUDGE

McDonald's is due to open its first branch in the Israeli Arab sector today.

The latest McDonald's, with signs in English, Hebrew and Arabic, is situated on the Haifa-Karmiel road opposite the entrance to Tamra, in the Galilee.

"The opening of the McDonald's branch in the Arab sector is a very positive step, which makes another contribution to the Arab sector, both from the business and economic aspects," said Tamra Municipality spokesman Diam Ra'ia.

"If McDonald's decided to open a branch in the Arab sector, it's a sign that we are on the map. We hope this will be a stepping stone to the opening of more businesses in the region," said Ra'ia.

The branch includes a restaurant that accommodates 100 people inside and a further 50 outdoors. It also has a drive-in window.

D'Amato implicated in campaign money scandal

By Jerusalem Post Staff

New York Sen. Alfonse D'Amato (Rep.), whose sagging popularity was rehabilitated by his probe of the Nazi gold scandal, is now in the midst of his own imbroglio.

D'Amato, head of a committee that solicits donations for national Republican Senate candidates, used the funds to help New York State Republicans, according to The New York Times.

Unbeknownst to donors, $1.9 million contributed to national Republican Senate campaigns, through a labyrinth of transfers, ended up in the campaign fund of New York Governor George Pataki, the Times reported.

In an editorial titled, "Senator D'Amato Shuffles the Money," the newspaper yesterday called for an investigation of D'Amato's "creative fund-raising practices," saying he "smashed the spirit" of campaign-finance regulation. The Times also suggested that Senate investigators examine the relationship between D'Amato's fund-raising and his role as chairman of the Senate Banking Committee.

D'Amato insists he did nothing illegal.

"We don't have an obligation to tell people" where their campaign contributions went, he told the Times. "Money is fungible." The editorial cited as an example a $100,000 senatorial donation from cosmetics executive Ronald Lauder, half of which was transferred to the Pataki campaign, even though state law limits to $28,000 individual contributions to gubernatorial candidates.

Lauder was not available for comment yesterday. It was not known if Lauder, who has strong ties to D'Amato and Pataki, was aware of the transfer.

Lauder, the new president of the Jewish National Fund and contender for chairman of the Conference of Presidents of Major American Jewish Organizations, is an executive of the World Jewish Congress. It was the WJC that drew D'Amato into the Swiss banks and Nazi gold affair, asking him to use his post as the chairman of the Senate Banking Committee to investigate the banks.
